The petitioner, Stanley Pruet Jobe, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the opinion and judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit entered in this case on December 5, 1996.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinions of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit appear at Appendix App. 1 through App. 124 to this petition. The Court's original opinion is reported at 77 F.3d 1461. The Court's amendment to that opinion on first rehearing is reported at 90 F.3d 920. The opinion on second rehearing is reported in 101 F.3d 1046. The final opinion was substituted for the first two opinions.

JURISDICTION

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit entered its judgment on the second rehearing on December 5, 1996. A third rehearing was denied on March 27, 1997. A copy of this denial is attached in the Appendix at Page App. 114. A copy of the judgment on rehearing is also attached in the Appendix at Page App. 105. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. The Basis for Jurisdiction Below.

The basis for the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas was 18 U.S.C. § 3231. Stanley Pruet Jobe was convicted of one count of conspiracy to commit bank fraud, one count of making false statements and false entries on the books of the bank in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371 and one count of bank fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1344.

B. The Facts Material to the Questions Presented.

Stanley Pruet Jobe and his co-defendants were indicted in a Third Superseding Indictment which contained twenty-six criminal counts and a claim of criminal forfeiture. Stanley Pruet Jobe was charged in nine of the twenty-six counts. The forfeiture allegations sought forfeiture of property owned by Stanley Pruet Jobe in addition to other properties owned by co-defendants. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of Stanley Pruet Jobe on two counts of making false statements in violaton of 18 U.S.C. § 1014, and two counts for money laundering in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1956(a)(1)(A)(i). The trial court also dismissed the criminal forfeiture allegations in a separate non-jury trial after the trial on the criminal case. The trial jury acquitted Stanley Pruet Jobe of one count of making false statements in violation of 18 U.S.C § 1014. Stanley Pruet Jobe was originally sentenced to five months incarceration, five months in a half-way house, a fine of $15,000.00, and the requisite penalty assessment.

On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit acquitted Stanley Pruet Jobe for lack of evidence on two additional counts, one for making false statements on a loan application in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014 and a second for aiding and abetting a false entry by a bank officer in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1005 and 2. The Court of Appeals further vacated Stanley Pruet Jobe's sentence since the two level enhancement under the Sentencing Guidelines for being an organizer, leader, manager or supervisor, was not supported by substantial evidence. The Court of Appeals affirmed Stanley Pruet Jobe's conviction upon Counts 1 and 2 of the indictment for conspiracy and for bank fraud.

The indictment charged five persons with various violations of federal criminal statutes. Stanley Pruet Jobe was the President of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc. The primary defendant in this case was Stanley Pruet Jobe's father, Billie Mac Jobe. At the time of the activities charged, from December, 1989 to July, 1991, Billie Mac Jobe was an officer of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc. and was a shareholder and director. Billie Mac Jobe and Stanley Pruet Jobe were also shareholders in Cal-Tex Spice Company. Philip Sutton was President of Continental National Bank in El Paso, Texas, during the period of the indictment. Steven Taylor was President of El Paso State Bank during the period of the indictment. Fernando Novoa, for approximately five months from December, 1989, was cashier of El Paso State Bank.

The indictment alleged an "expanded check kiting scheme". The government alleged Billie Mac Jobe wrote a number of checks on uncollected funds. The government also claimed Billie Mac Jobe purchased cashier checks and made wire transfers between banks with the proceeds of some of these checks. The government claimed that Billie Mac Jobe had used his personal accounts, accounts of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., Cal-Tex Spice Co., and Stanley Pruet Jobe's personal accounts. The government alleged that Stanley Pruet Jobe had secured loans through false statements which loans were injected into the kite to keep it afloat. It was undisputed that all of the check writing activities, money order activities and cashier check activities were conducted by Billie Mac Jobe, not Stanley Pruet Jobe. The evidence further showed that all checks were paid at or about the time of presentment to the various banks and that all loans were paid in accordance with their terms, including interest. The various banks had also charged varying fees for the use of uncollected funds by Billie Mac Jobe. The government analyzed Billie Mac Jobe's check writing activities for several months at the beginning and at the end of the period of the claimed conspiracy. The analysis showed that during the times analyzed, Stanley Pruet Jobe's personal bank accounts maintained a collected balance. The trial court, at sentencing, found that there had been no loss as a result of the activities charged in the indictment and sentenced on that basis. At sentencing, the trial court noted that it was surprised that the jury had convicted Stanley Pruet Jobe.

During the trial, one of the jurors had a conversation with an individual who was employed by a director and substantial shareholder of the Continental National Bank. The juror told the individual that his employer's name was being mentioned quite a bit during the course of the trial. The employee told the juror that Billie Mac Jobe had previously been convicted in a similar case and because of that conviction the employee would not be at all surprised to find that something improper was going on here. No evidence was presented at the trial that Billie Mac Jobe had any previous arrests or convictions. Billie Mac Jobe chose to exercise his right not to testify. The Court had ruled prior to the trial that Billie Mac Jobe's conviction was inadmissible unless he testified.

Billie Mac Jobe has a previous conviction for mail fraud which had been alleged to be a check kite. As a result of this conversation, the juror became aware that Billie Mac Jobe had a prior conviction for similar conduct as was charged by the government in the present case. Stanley Pruet Jobe had not been a party to the previous indictment or charge. No evidence had been introduced in the trial concerning Billie Mac Jobe's prior conviction or the underlying facts of that conviction. After this conversation, which occurred during the trial, the jury convicted Stanley Pruet Jobe on four counts, including two counts upon which the Court of Appeals determined there was no evidence to support a conviction.

After the trial, the defendants became aware of the extraneous material being brought to the juror's attention and raised the issue in connection with their motions for new trial or supplemental motions for new trial. The defendants also requested a hearing on this issue. As a part of the motion, an affidavit of the juror in question was submitted by the defendants wherein the juror admits the conversation with the third party and describes the inadmissible evidence that had been presented to the juror.

The trial court did not hold a hearing and denied the motions of the defendants, holding there was no possibility of prejudice since the information was not about Stanley Pruet Jobe. The Fifth Circuit affirmed the decision of the trial court not to grant a hearing and not to grant a new trial, holding the trial court had not abused its discretion. The Fifth Circuit stated the trial court investigated the alleged impropriety when it considered the juror's affidavit.

REASONS WHY THE WRIT SHOULD BE GRANTED

The decision of the Fifth Circuit conflicts with this Court's decision in Remmer v. U.S., 347 U.S. 227 (1954) (hereinafter referred to as "Remmer I") and numerous decisions from other Courts of Appeal holding a hearing is required when defendants prove extraneous, inadmissible material is brought to the attention of the jury during the trial. U.S. v. Bagnariol, 665 F.2d 877 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 962; and U.S. v. Reynolds, 64 F.3d 292 (7th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 116 S.Ct. 969. In fact, the Fifth Circuit has in the past held a hearing is required and it was an abuse of discretion to not hold such a hearing. U.S. v. Chiantese, 582 F.2d 974 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 922; Richardson v. U.S., 360 F.2d 366 (5th Cir. 1966); and U.S. v. Howard, 506 F.2d 865 (5th Cir. 1975).

In Remmer v. U.S., 347 U.S. 227 (1954), the Court held that any private communication, contact, tampering, directly or indirectly, with the jury during the trial about the matter pending before the jury, is deemed presumptively prejudicial if the contact with jurors is not made pursuant to known rules of the court and instructions and directions of the court made during the trial with full knowledge of the parties. The Court held the burden rests on the government to establish at hearing after notice to the defendant that such contact with a juror was harmless to the defendant. The Court stated that a trial court should not decide and take final action ex parte on information, but should determine the circumstances, the impact thereof upon the juror and whether it was prejudicial at a hearing with all interested parties permitted to participate.

Subsequently, in Remmer v. U.S., 350 U.S. 377 (1956) (hereinafter referred to as "Remmer II"), after remand, this Court clarified its original holding. At the hearing, the trial court inquired only as to the purpose and effect of the FBI investigation, and did not consider the original communication with the juror which caused the FBI investigation. In the Remmer II case, this Court held that the unduly restrictive interpretation by the trial court had the effect of diluting the force of all other facts and circumstances in the case that may have influenced and disturbed the juror's judgment. The court granted a new trial in the Remmer II case.

Subsequent to Remmer, this Court in Smith v. Phillips, 455 U.S. 209 (1982), stated that this Court has long held the remedy for allegations of juror partiality is a hearing in which the defendant has an opportunity to prove actual bias. This Court held that the impact on the juror and whether it was prejudicial must be determined "in a hearing with all interested parties permitted to participate." 455 U.S. at 216.

The evidence against the defendant is required to come from the witness stand in a public courtroom where there is full judicial protection of the defendant's right of confrontation, of cross-examination and of counsel. The accused is entitled to a right to a trial by an impartial jury and to confront the witnesses against him. Parker v. Gladden, 385 U.S. 363 (1966). To allow one or more jurors to consider inadmissible prejudicial evidence of other acts received by them from hearsay outside the courtroom clearly violates the constitutional rights of the defendant. In fact, this Court has held the mere introduction of evidence of prior convictions from a source outside the courtroom, warrants the grant of a new trial. See, Marshall v. U.S., 360 U.S. 310 (1959). Even in the case relied upon by the Fifth Circuit in this case, U.S. v. Ruggiero, 56 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 116 S.Ct. 397, 486, the court held such a hearing.

Furthermore, the Courts of Appeal have split on whether Smith v. Phillips, supra, shifted the burden in a Remmer hearing from the government to the defendant. The Sixth Circuit has held that the burden is now on the defendant rather than the government. U.S. v. Pennell, 737 F.2d 521 (6th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1158, and U.S. v. Walker, 1 F.3d 423 (6th Cir. 1993). Other Courts of Appeal have held the burden in a Remmer hearing remains on the government. U.S. v. Littlefield, 752 F.2d 1429 (9th Cir. 1985) and U.S. v. Butler, 822 F.2d 1191 (D.C. Cir. 1987). At least one court has questioned the effect of Rule 606(B) on Remmer I. See, U.S. v. Greer, 620 F.2d 1383 (10th Cir. 1980).

There is no dispute in the record that the juror in this case received extrinsic evidence of a prior conviction for similar conduct by Billie Mac Jobe. It is further undisputed that the person conveying this information to the juror indicated he wouldn't be surprised that there was something improper going on in this case. In Remmer I, this raised a presumption of prejudice. The burden shifted to the government to establish, after notice and hearing, that contact with the jury was harmless to the defendant. Such a determination of harmlessness can only be made in a full evidentiary hearing as was recognized in Remmer I.

The decision of the Fifth Circuit conflicts with the Remmer I decision. This is an important issue that should be decided by the Court.

The constitution requires a fair trial before a jury who decides the case only on the evidence introduced in court, not on rumors received by the jury during the trial from third parties. Turner v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 466, 472 (1965) (the Sixth Amendment requires the verdict to be based on the evidence presented at the trial). A defendant has a constitutional right that those persons offering evidence to the jury appear in court to be confronted and cross-examined.

By failing to hold the hearing the trial court in effect held that the extraneous information was not presumptively prejudicial. This conflicts with Remmer I. There was no shift of burden to the government. Certainly a juror being told of a prior conviction and that he would not be surprised that there was something improper in the present case raises a presumption of prejudice which can only be rebutted by the government. This is not a case where a defendant made an unsubstantiated allegation that extraneous information was given to the jury. Here, it is undisputed that a juror received inadmissible evidence and opinion on the guilt of the defendant.

The decision of the Fifth Circuit conflicts with the Remmer I decision and decisions from other Circuits. This is an important issue that should be heard by this Court. This Court has not revisited the issue as to the requirement of a hearing and the scope of the hearing after the enactment of the Federal Rules of Evidence. There is confusion among the Courts of Appeal as to when a hearing is required and as to the extent of that hearing, all of which should be clarified by this Court. This Court should also resolve the conflict between the Circuits as to whether the government or the defendant has the burden of proof at a Remmer hearing.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas

(Filed Mar. 8, 1996)

Before JONES, STEWART and PARKER,* Circuit Judges.

EDITH H. JONES, Circuit Judge:

Appellants Billie Mac Jobe ("Billie Mac"), Stanley Pruet Jobe ("Stanley"), Stephen Taylor, Philip Mark Sutton and Fernando Novoa were convicted by a jury of various offenses undertaken to organize, conduct, and maintain an elaborate and expanded check-kiting scheme through El Paso banks for over a year and a half. On appeal, they pose numerous challenges to their convictions and sentences. After carefully considering these challenges and the underlying record, this court AFFIRMS the conviction as charged in Count 2 for all of the appellants, VACATES Stanley's managerial or supervisory sentencing enhancement, and REMANDS Stanley's case for resentencing.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND[1]

The appellants were indicted for bank fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1344 and 2, and for conspiracy to commit bank fraud, to make false entries in bank records, and to obtain loans via false statements in loan applications, contravening 18 U.S.C. § 371. In addition, the indictment charged that some or all of the appellants had made false statements on loan applications,[2] false bank entries, reports, and transactions,[3] laundered funds,[4] or aided and abetted such activities.[5] The indictment requested a criminal forfeiture of property.[6]

The district court bifurcated the criminal trial and the request for criminal forfeiture. After nearly two weeks of trial on the criminal charges, the jury returned the following verdicts: all defendants were convicted of conspiracy to commit bank fraud ("Count 1"); Billie Mac was convicted of bank fraud, while Stanley, Taylor, Sutton, and Novoa were convicted of aiding and abetting this bank fraud ("Count 2"); Taylor and Sutton were convicted of making false bank entries in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1005 and 2 (collectively, Counts 4, 6, and 16); and Stanley was convicted both of aiding and abetting Sutton to make a false bank entry (Count 6) and of making false statements on a bank loan application (Count 5).[7]

Although each appellant was convicted by the jury of various offenses undertaken to organize, conduct, and maintain an elaborate check kiting scheme, at the sentencing hearing, the district court found no evidence of monetary loss to any of the financial institutions involved. In part for this reason, the appellants received light concurrent sentences: Billie Mac was sentenced to eighteen months incarceration and fined $30,000; Stanley received five months incarceration, five months of community confinement in a residential facility or half-way house, and a $15,000 fine; Taylor, ten months incarceration; Sutton, ten months incarceration; and Novoa, five months incarceration and five months of community confinement in a residential facility or half-way house; the appellants were also ordered to serve three-year terms of supervised release.

[7] The district court, after a separate forfeiture proceeding, entered a judgment of acquittal on those allegations.

A discussion of some of the voluminous evidence concerning the appellants' relationships to the involved financial institutions and the crucial transactions involved in the prosecution is necessary to understand this opinion's analysis.

Billie Mac was a 1/3 owner, officer and director of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., in El Paso, Texas. He also owned the Jobe Bar Track Ranch and was a part owner, officer and director of Cal-Tex Spice Co. He and his son, Stanley, owned a 40% share of First Park National Bank ("FPNB") of Livingston, Montana, a federally insured financial institution. Billie Mac maintained checking accounts at FPNB as well as at El Paso State Bank ("EPSB"), a federally insured, state chartered bank in El Paso; Jobe Concrete Products and Cal-Tex Spice had checking accounts at EPSB. Billie Mac was a shareholder of EPSB.

Stanley, Billie Mac's son, was president and a 1/3 owner of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., a partial owner and director of Cal-Tex Spice Co. and a shareholder and director of EPSB. At FPNB in Montana, Stanley maintained a checking account and sat on the board of directors.

The remaining appellants are employees of some of the financial institutions involved. Taylor was the president of EPSB. Novoa, as a cashier and officer of EPSB, approved significant wire transfer transactions involving Billie Mac. After leaving his employment with EPSB, Novoa became president of Cal-Tex Spice and performed various financial and administrative work for Jobe Concrete Products. Sutton was the president of another federally insured bank used in the kite, Continental National Bank ("CNB").

The scope of the expanded check kite was uncovered essentially by FBI special agent Randy Wolverton ("Wolverton"), whose analysis of the activity in several Jobe checking accounts from December of 1989 through July of 1991, revealed that a large kite was underway involving Billie Mac and Stanley and their checking accounts at CNB, TCB, FNPB, and EPSB.

In order to manipulate and maximize the float, or lag time between transactions in the banking system, Billie Mac and his cohorts inflated his account balances artificially by making countless wire transfers based on uncollected funds, by writing checks against uncollected or nonexistent funds, and by consummating fraudulent loans that were camouflaged by false entries or statements in bank records. As a result of these machinations, very large checks were routinely paid in full despite the actual insufficiency of funds to cover them. Billie Mac's check kite was remarkably efficient; unlike the vast majority of check kites, this one not only stayed constantly ahead of the lag but never did self-destruct. Evidence at trial demonstrated that none of the checks written by Billie Mac was ever dishonored or returned for insufficient funds, and all of the loans used to commence the kiting scheme were paid in full and with interest to the lenders.

Further evidence of the "success" of the check-kiting is revealed by the vast sums of money floated. Wolverton testified that bank records for December 1, 1989 through March 12, 1990, created the impression that $150,000,000 had been deposited into the Jobe accounts, although less than 15% of that figure, or approximately $20,000,000, was actually present in these accounts. Similarly, from April through June of 1991, Wolverton explained that although bank records indicated that $58,000,000 was deposited into these accounts, "77% of those, or about $44,000,000 worth of those deposits, were nothing more than checks and wire transfers being exchanged with each other through these accounts, thereby artificially inflating the accounts." Only $13,000,000 was actually deposited into the accounts.

Profits from the scheme were used to finance business ventures for Billie Mac and Stanley. For example, in late 1989, Jobe Concrete Products purchased a spice plant from the Baltimore Spice Co. for nearly $3,500,000 and Cal-Tex Spice Co. Austin Hale ("Hale"), the credit manager and eventually vice-president of Jobe Concrete Products, testified that neither Jobe Concrete Products nor Billie Mac had enough liquidity to fund these purchases. Hale further testified that Stanley concurred and expressed his concern to Hale that the company needed cash not only to finance its investment and business activities, but also so that his father, who was "overly stressed about the situation", would not need to work as hard.

Billie Mac commenced the kite by opening a checking account for the Jobe Bar Track Ranch at CNB. Before it was officially opened, Billie Mac wrote himself a check from the new account or starter booklet for $990,000, endorsed this check, and deposited it at EPSB. The opening balance of the CNB checking account was, however, only $1,000. Sutton was the account officer at CNB supervising the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account.

After the CNB check was deposited at EPSB, EPSB issued a cashier's check for $3,536,347 to Billie Mac signed by Taylor, the bank president. Although standard banking practice would require EPSB to post an entry in its books or records indicating that the cashier's check had been issued, no such entry was made in EPSB records that day; in fact, no entry was made into EPSB records until several days later on January 4, 1990. Nearly a week earlier, on the same afternoon that he obtained the EPSB check, Billie Mac used this cashier's check to purchase the spice plant.

When the original $990,000 CNB check was presented for payment at that bank, Martha Karlsruher ("Karlsruher"), a senior vice president and bank cashier, noticed that this large check had been written on the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account before it had opened and that the balance in the account was merely $1,000. She immediately advised Sutton of her findings, but he authorized forced payment of the check nonetheless, explaining that a pending loan from CNB to Billie Mac would provide the necessary funds.

As Sutton had explained, CNB did lend Billie Mac $925,000, its legal lending limit, on January 8, 1990 and back-dated this loan to January 5. The loan's stated purpose was to "[r]eplenish personal liquidity utilized in the purchase of Baltimore Spice of Texas." However, the loan did not replenish Billie Mac's personal liquidity, but was rather deposited directly into the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account, so that the $990,000 check that had been presented for payment could clear. Karlsruher further explained that because the bank's management and loan committee were "in a hurry to fund the loan [and] disburse the monies to the customer," they did not review Billie Mac's loan application before approving it.

This type of suspicious activity continued in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account and in other accounts including the Jobe Concrete Products checking account at Texas Commerce Bank ("TCB"). In February or March of 1990, Hale, Jobe Concrete's credit manager, learned that Billie Mac was signing checks on the Jobe Concrete Products account but failing to list either a payee or amount on the company's check log. Hale began to be "suspicious of a check kite." As these suspicions grew, he "started looking for another job" and eventually quit in November of 1991.

The check kiting activity also became more obvious to employees in the banks used in the kite. For instance, from January through July of 1990, Karlsruher, who had already noticed unusual activity in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account at CNB and had discussed this with Sutton, warned Sutton repeatedly that she suspected kiting by Billie Mac and that any further loans to him would exceed CNB's legal limit. Sutton assured her that "it was a normal business practice for certain companies to operate this way," but Karlsruher disagreed and had not observed such practice in her experience as a banker.

Sutton's actions began to breach standard banking practice or policy. He occasionally extended CNB's closing deadline in order to give Billie Mac sufficient time to deposit or wire funds to cover overdrafts.[8] Karlsruher testified that Billie Mac was virtually the only customer who received such specialized treatment.[9] Further, despite express warnings from Karlsruher that kiting was going on and that a criminal referral should be filed regarding Billie Mac's activities, Sutton continued to approve forced payment of countless checks written by Billie Mac far in excess of the balance in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account at CNB. Although Karlsruher could have filed a criminal referral regarding the activity, she explained that she did not do so because she was "provided a copy of a board resolution that ordered management not to file this referral."

Others associated and employed by CNB, who could not help but notice that Sutton was approving numerous forced payments on checks written by Billie Mac, came to share Karlsruher's concerns about the check kite. Patrick Kennedy ("Kennedy"), CNB's attorney, reviewed some of Billie Mac's activities in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account and suggested that CNB file a criminal referral. Although Kennedy repeatedly attempted to discuss this suggestion with Sutton and to obtain additional information from

[8] The closing deadline at CNB was normally 2:00 p.m. If the bank could not settle its funds by that time, these funds were not available for overnight investment and the bank risked losing the corresponding overnight interest.

[9] As Karlsruher explained, "[t]he only [other customer] that comes to mind, but that was a few years later, that [sic] would have been El Paso Auction."

him, Sutton was unresponsive. Patricia McLean ("McLean"), CNB's loan review officer, not only suggested that a criminal referral be filed, but also expressed concerns to Sutton that if CNB continued to lend to Billie Mac or any affiliated entity, the bank might exceed its legal lending limits. Yet again, these warnings went unheeded.

Indeed, loan activity at CNB involving the Jobes continued. On May 21, 1990, with Sutton acting as the bank's loan officer, CNB funded a $750,000 loan to Deer Creek Spice Co., guaranteed by Stanley. In a loan presentation form, an internal document prepared by bank employees, the purpose of the Deer Creek Spice loan was described as acquisition of inventory, and the loan principals were listed as Stanley and Frank Owen IV. Although the size of the Deer Creek Spice loan mandated review by CNB's management loan committee, no such review occurred.

On the very day that the Deer Creek Spice loan was authorized, Stanley endorsed the check for the proceeds and turned it over to Billie Mac who, in turn, deposited it into the cashier's checking account at EPSB. The proceeds of the Deer Creek Spice loan were used to pay for cashier's checks that Billie Mac had obtained from EPSB earlier in the day. These cashier's checks had been deposited at CNB to allow a $750,000 check written against the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account to clear; not surprisingly, the $750,000 check had been written by Billie Mac and was payable to him.

Eventually, Sutton, Karlsruher, and McLean were asked to meet with Kennedy, John Wright, the chairman of the board of CNB, and Jack Cardwell, a board member, to discuss Billie Mac's relations with the bank. After the meeting, Karlsruher testified that Sutton ordered her not to contact either bank directors or bank attorneys without his preclearance; he threatened to fire her or any other employee who filed a criminal referral on Billie Mac and promised her a promotion and raise for her cooperation. Sutton stressed to her that a criminal referral on Billie Mac "would cause [the Jobes] serious financial harm and set-backs and that the other banks they were dealing with may call their loans . . . once an investigation ensued." Finally, however, after a CNB board meeting in June of 1990, the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account was closed and Billie Mac paid CNB for his use of uncollected funds an amount equal to what the bank would have earned in an overnight investment of those funds at the federal funds rate. Of course, as Karlsruher explained, the federal funds rate is lower than the commercial loan rate.

Undaunted, Billie Mac and his cohorts continued their expanded check kite even after the CNB account closed. Loans from other banks were used to float the kite, and unconventional wire transfer procedures both inflated checking account balances artificially and concealed insufficient funds or overdrafts. Unlike checks, wire transfers experience no float or lag time. When a normal electronic wire transfer occurs, funds are simultaneously deducted from the transferring institution's account at the Federal Reserve and credited to the recipient's bank account.

But Billie Mac's multiple wire transfers were not conventional ones. Taylor, the president of EPSB, and Novoa, the bank's cashier and senior officer in charge of accounting and of the wire transfer room, authorized wire transfer personnel to credit Billie Mac's checks immediately and to make wire transfers for him without waiting for the necessary funds to be collected.[10] Diana Vincent, an internal auditor with EPSB, testified that the countless wire transfers completed for Billie Mac on uncollected funds violated standard EPSB policy that all wires be paid for with collected funds. Vincent also testified that had Billie Mac been forced to comply with bank policy and deposit sufficient funds before conducting a wire transfer, his insufficient accounts would have appeared on the bank's uncollected funds or overdraft reports. Billie Mac's accounts escaped these reports because Novoa was initialing most of Billie Mac's checks and approving them for immediate credit.[11] According to Laura Avila an employee in the EPSB wire transfer room, both Novoa and Taylor would initial the checks to authorize immediate credit.

Because of the specialized treatment that Billie Mac received from Taylor and Novoa at EPSB, he made the bank's wire transfer department a second home, visiting several times daily from January through September of 1990 and sending hundreds of wire transfers during that time. At trial, the testimony of Avila and Maria Reyes

[10] Although this practice is unconventional, the government concedes that it is not necessarily illegal. Banks enjoy some discretion to extend immediate or "next day" credit on uncollected funds.

[11] Although Vincent explained that, in most instances, Novoa's initials appeared on the checks, she admitted that occasionally other officers or authorized personnel would initial them.

Novoa's administrative assistant who supervised the wire transfer room, indicated that Billie Mac's transfers began at around $50,000 a day, but quickly grew to $500,000 and then to a combined daily total of $1,000,000.

These frantic and unconventional wire transfers led other employees at EPSB to suspect kiting. For instance, Reyes grew concerned about the fact that Billie Mac was allowed to conduct wire transfers when his accounts were insufficient to pay for these transfers. Reyes recounted that once, after she had verified that the account against which Billie Mac had intended to pay for the transfer had insufficient funds, she took the check to Novoa and, although she did not expressly inform him of the insufficiency, he ordered her to proceed with the wire transfer. As this transfer activity continued, Reyes eventually spoke with Taylor, but to no avail. She explained, "[s]ince I was concerned, I went and asked [Taylor], you know, if he was aware that the checks were, you know, going through. And he told me that he was going to check into it and that he would get back to me. But he never got back to me."

Yvonne Pearson, an employee in the proof department at EPSB, testified that since Billie Mac was allowed to conduct transfers on uncollected funds, proof department employees were allowed to override the proof machine's time consuming determination of the float for a check. To circumvent the proof machine, Billie Mac's checks were deposited using special deposit slips initialed by bank officers to allow for next-day availability; most of these deposit slips were initialed by her boss, Novoa. Furthermore, when Billie Mac would present such a deposit slip, a special transaction code would be entered into the bank's records that would prevent the checks from appearing on the bank's uncollected funds report. Because of these suspicious activities and practices, Pearson concluded that she "knew" that Billie Mac was kiting checks.

Vincent, EPSB's internal auditor, warned Taylor in a memorandum that Billie Mac was kiting checks "to the tune of $790,000 to $1,760,000 a day, and this amount is steadily increasing," as well as conducting wire transfers on uncollected funds. Moreover, she explained that Taylor's and Novoa's decision to extend Billie Mac next day availability on checks made it difficult to ascertain the full extent of the ongoing kite. Taylor delayed responding to Vincent for nearly three weeks before asking her "to track the activity for a few days and report back to him."

Vincent did exactly that. After tracking Billie Mac's accounts for two days, she sent Taylor another memorandum detailing transactions in which Billie Mac was given more than $3,200,000 in immediate credit to pay for wire transfers from EPSB. After Taylor received this memo, Vincent testified that to her knowledge, Taylor did not take any remedial action and did not speak with her about either the memo or the activity which had been tracked.

Even Billie Mac's own employees began to question the deposit and wire transfer activity at EPSB. Hale, the vice president of Jobe Concrete Products, testified that he had a conversation with Billie Mac regarding this activity. According to Hale, Billie Mac explained that Novoa had developed a system by which he could receive immediate credit for deposits merely by using special deposit slips.[12] Eventually, Novoa resigned his position at EPSB and went to work for his esteemed customer, Billie Mac, as president of Cal-Tex Spice and at Jobe Concrete Products.

Upon Novoa's departure from EPSB, Barbara Baker ("Baker"), the acting cashier for the bank, learned about the practice of allowing Billie Mac to conduct wire transfers on uncollected funds. She testified that this practice did not leave a good audit trail and impeded the bank's ability to analyze float and collectability of Billie Mac's checks. Baker then sent Taylor a memo reiterating these conclusions and suggesting that funds be collected from Billie Mac before he be allowed to conduct a wire transfer.

After sending the memo to Taylor, Baker met with him. She testified that during this meeting, Taylor appeared shocked by the activity in Billie Mac's accounts; as Baker recalled, "[Taylor] had the memo in his hand and he just kind of shook his head a little bit and said, 'Billie Mac is kiting. How long did he think he could get away with this?' " Taylor then gathered the copies of Baker's memo and "threw them in the trash and he said he wanted all the copies out of circulation. He didn't want any copies of the memo in the bank." However, even after receiving memoranda from both Baker and Vincent, Taylor still approved wire transfers for Billie Mac on uncollected funds.

[12] On appeal, Novoa objects to this portion of Hale's testimony under Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S. Ct. 1620 (1968). The objection will be discussed infra.

Perhaps exhausted by his daily trips to the wire room at EPSB, Billie Mac began wiring funds from CNB where he no longer had an account. Much as Taylor and Novoa had ordered at EPSB, Sutton authorized Billie Mac to conduct wire transfers on uncollected funds, even though no other customer was regularly extended such a privilege. However, these transactions, unlike the transfers at EPSB, were appearing regularly on the bank's "deficit available balance report" as suffering from a large, uncollected balance. Sutton approached Karlsruher with a proposal to give Billie Mac's checks a special transaction code which would camouflage them from the bank's reporting system. She refused to participate in such a scheme.

The very day that bank examiners arrived at CNB to analyze the transfer activity, Billie Mac stopped making wire transfers from that bank. As the bank examiners analyzed accounts at CNB and at EPSB, they began to discover the vast extent of Billie Mac's kiting scheme. For instance, while EPSB was lending Billie Mac and Stanley over $1,000,000 each year, the bank's average collected balances were negative.

While the bank examiners continued to investigate, Taylor spoke to Tom Burress ("Burress"), one of the examiners analyzing loans and accounts at EPSB. Taylor wanted to explain the cashier's check for over $3,500,000 that Billie Mac had been given on December 29, 1989, without any confirmation that he had sufficient funds to pay for it. Taylor told Burress "[t]hat Fernando Novoa presented the check for him to sign. Taylor signed the check without verifying that there [sic] collected funds in the account sufficient to pay for the check. His stated reason was that he had faith in the cashier that that [sic] was okay." Taylor also told Burress that he believed that Novoa had held some checks written by Billie Mac in his desk until January 4, 1990, the date on which the cashier's check was actually purchased. The next day, however, Taylor changed his story, suggesting that "he was wrong in accusing [Novoa] of holding the checks in his drawer. And prior to this occurrence, he had no reason to fault [Novoa's] work."[13]

As the involvement of bank examiners and federal agents intensified, Billie Mac's expanded check kite came to a crashing halt. At trial, there was substantial disagreement over the loss, if any, that the banks involved in this kite had suffered. All of the loans and checks had been paid and honored. From this fact, Rene Pena ("Pena"), a certified public accountant who testified as a defense expert, concluded that the banks had suffered no loss. Although Pena recognized that the various Jobe accounts were frequently in overdraft, he noted that this overdraft was usually corrected quickly. According to Pena, Billie Mac was merely "actively utilizing the loans in a constant cash management . . . of running the [Jobe] entities as a whole."

DISCUSSION

I. Appellants' Common Challenges to their Convictions

A. Juror Misconduct

Billie Mac, Stanley, Sutton, and Novoa appeal the district court's denial of an evidentiary hearing to investigate allegations of juror misconduct and its denial of their motions for a new trial based partially on this alleged misconduct.

Appellants complain that during the trial, John A. Shamaley ("Shamaley"), one of the jurors, was told by a relative that Billie Mac had "previously been convicted in another bank fraud case." In an affidavit submitted to the district court, Shamaley explained that at some time during the trial, he told David Carnes a relative, that Carnes's employer, Jack Cardwell had been mentioned during the trial; Cardwell was a member of the board of directors of CNB. Carnes told Shamaley that Billie Mac had previously been convicted of bank fraud and suggested to Shamaley that because of this prior conviction, "he would not be at all surprised to find that something improper was going on here." However, Shamaley acknowledged in his affidavit that

> [t]here was no evidence presented at the trial that Billie Mac Jobe had any previous arrests or convictions. I did not relay this information to any of the other jurors on this case, but I was aware after the conversation with David Carnes that Mr.

> Jobe had previously been convicted of the same offense that he was charged with in this case.[14]

(emphasis added).

This court reviews the district court's denial of a motion for new trial for abuse of discretion. United States v. Sanchez-Sotelo, 8 F.3d 202, 212 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1410 (1994). Likewise, "[t]he procedures used to investigate allegations of juror misconduct and the decision as to whether to hold an evidentiary hearing are matters which rest solely within the sound discretion of the district court." United States v. Roberts, 913 F.2d 211, 216 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied sub nom., Preston v. United States, 500 U.S. 955, 111 S. Ct. 2264 (1991).

Recently, this court reiterated the principle that in any trial there is an initial presumption of jury impartiality. United States v. Ruggiero, 56 F.3d 647, 652 (5th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, ___ S. Ct. ___ (1995). This presumption may be defeated, however, through evidence that the extrinsic factual matter actually tainted the jury's deliberations. Id. (citing United States v. O'Keefe, 722 F.2d 1175, 1179 (5th Cir. 1983)). A district court must investigate the asserted impropriety only when a colorable showing of extrinsic influence is made. Id.

[14] In fact, the information that Carnes relayed to Shamaley was technically incorrect. In 1979, Billie Mac had pleaded guilty to one count of mail fraud. At a pretrial hearing, the district court indicated that this prior conviction would be admissible at trial for impeachment purposes only if Billie Mac testified; he did not.

Ruggiero not only examined when a district court must investigate alleged juror misconduct, but also explained

> . . . that a defendant is entitled to a new trial when extrinsic evidence is introduced into the jury room unless there is no reasonable possibility that the jury's verdict was influenced by the material that improperly came before it.

Id. (citations omitted). Hence, when extrinsic evidence is introduced into the jury room, the defendant enjoys a rebuttable presumption of prejudice and "the government has the burden of proving the harmlessness of the breach." Id. (citations omitted). When the district court considers whether the government has carried this burden, it should examine "the content of the extrinsic material, the manner in which it came to the jury's attention, and the weight of the evidence against the defendant." Id. at 652-53 (citations omitted).

In the instant case, the district court investigated the alleged impropriety when it considered Shamaley's affidavit. Through this affidavit and through the evidence at trial, the court was able to conduct the inquiry mandated in Ruggiero. Having done so, the court concluded that there was no reasonable possibility that the extrinsic information had prejudiced the appellants. When discussing Billie Mac, the court reasoned that

> The circumstances fail to indicate that Defendant Billie Mac Jobe was prejudiced by the incident. Juror Shamaley obviously attributed no significance to the incident, because he did not report it to the Court or to any other juror. Furthermore, the record shows that Billie Mac

> Jobe was named as a defendant in six counts that were submitted to the jury for a verdict, and the jury found Jobe not guilty as to four of those counts. . . . Under the facts of this case, the Court is unable to find a reasonable possibility that the extrinsic information communicated to one juror prejudiced the Defendant.

Because the information relayed to Shamaley did not taint his deliberations, the information was not relayed to any other jurors, and the evidence against Billie Mac on the counts of conviction was overwhelming, the district court did not abuse its discretion when it denied the appellants' request for a new trial without first ordering an evidentiary hearing.[15] It is unnecessary to apply the Ruggiero factors separately to each of the other defendants, as there is no likelihood that they were prejudiced in any way by the tainted report of Billie Mac's prior criminal conduct.

[15] Additionally, as Ruggiero explains, a court is limited in its ability to inquire into jury deliberations. Federal Rule of Evidence 606(b) forbids a juror from testifying about deliberations, and this rule also bars juror testimony regarding

> at least four topics: (1) the method or arguments of the jury's deliberations, (2) the effect of any particular thing upon an outcome in the deliberations, (3) the mindset or emotions of any juror during deliberation, and (4) the testifying juror's own mental process during the deliberations.

Ruggiero, 56 F.3d at 652. Given these limitations, an evidentiary hearing would have provided the district court with virtually nothing but what was already contained in the Shamaley affidavit.

B. Jury Instructions

All of the appellants contend that the district court erroneously declined to submit their requested instruction on good faith to the jury. Furthermore, the appellants argue that the instruction given to the jury somehow shifted the burden of proof from the government to the appellants when it failed to inform jurors that the government carried the burden of negating their claims of good faith. The appellants also suggest that the district court erroneously limited their defense of good faith by failing to extend this defense to the false entry offenses.

Billie Mac urges similar error with respect to his requested instructions on willfulness and specific intent. He notes that the district court did not explicitly define either term and suggests that the court's omission seriously impeded his ability to present his defense to the jury.

Recognizing that district courts enjoy substantial latitude in formulating jury instructions, this court reviews the refusal to provide a requested jury instruction for abuse of discretion. United States v. Smithson, 49 F.3d 138, 142 (5th Cir. 1995). The district court will not abuse its discretion when it denies a proffered instruction unless this instruction "(1) was a correct statement of the law, (2) was not substantially covered in the charge as a whole, and (3) concerned an important point in the trial such that the failure to instruct the jury on the issue seriously impaired the defendant's ability to present a given defense." Id.

In this case, the district court did instruct the jurors on good faith. The instruction explained that

> [i]n determining whether or not any defendant acted with criminal intent to defraud or deceive, you may consider whether or not that defendant had a good faith belief that what he was doing was legal. If you have a reasonable doubt as to whether or not a defendant had a good faith belief that was [sic] he was doing was legal, you must acquit that defendant or defendants and say by your verdict 'not guilty.'

The appellants' challenges to this instruction are meritless. This instruction in no way reduces the government's burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt or thrusts a burden on the appellants. Moreover, the court did not limit its good faith instruction to certain appellants or defenses; rather, the instruction provides that the good faith of any appellant may be considered when adjudicating his criminal intent on any charged offense.

Although Billie Mac contends that the district court erred when it refused separately to define either willfulness[16] or specific intent, the court clearly defined "knowingly." Indeed, its definition of this term came from this circuit's pattern jury instructions and provided that "[t]he word 'knowingly' as that term is used in these instructions, means that the act was done voluntarily and intentionally and not because of mistake or accident." Though the district court did not explicitly define specific intent,

[16] In its conspiracy instructions, the court instructed the jury that they must conclude beyond reasonable doubt "[t]hat the defendant knew the unlawful purpose of the agreement and joined in it willfully, that is with the intent to further the unlawful purpose." Hence, while the instructions may have not separately defined willfulness, when read as a whole, they did include such a definition.

it correctly charged the jurors on the element of intent in each offense. Both of Billie Mac's proposed instructions on specific intent merely reiterate that the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt "that the defendants knowingly did an act which the law forbids. . . . " (emphasis added). The effect of the proposed instructions is redundant, and they were unnecessary.

In sum, the court's instructions accurately reflected the law and substantially covered the appellants' proffered instructions without impairing the ability of any of the appellants to advance a defense.

C. Joint Motion for Severance

Stanley, Taylor, Sutton, and Novoa contend that the district court abused its discretion when it denied their joint motion for severance. The joint motion was premised on the belief that at a separate trial, Billie Mac would provide exculpatory testimony for the appellants. To support this belief, the appellants submitted in camera Billie Mac's affidavit, which stated that he would testify at a separate trial in which he was not a co-defendant. The affidavit also asserted that Billie Mac would testify that, to his knowledge, none of the other appellants had committed any of the charged offenses.

The district court denied the joint motion for severance after conducting a hearing. The court reasoned that Billie Mac's affidavit "falls far short of demonstrating a basis for severance." As the court put it, Billie Mac insisted in his affidavit > that he acted in good faith in connection with all the financial transactions involved in the indictment, and that he committed no offense. The remainder of his affidavit consists of conclusory statements that his co-Defendants did not conspire with him to commit any offense and that they are innocent of any wrongdoing . . . If he gave the testimony at a severed trial, it would have little evidentiary value.

To allege a prima facie case for severance based on the exculpatory testimony of a co-defendant, a defendant must first show, among other things, that the testimony is truly exculpatory in nature and effect. United States v. Rocha, 916 F.2d 219, 232 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 934, 111 S. Ct. 2057 (1991) (laying out detailed criteria for severance based on 26 codefendant testimony). Billie Mac's affidavit did not fulfill that standard.

The appellants rely on this court's decision in United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1165 (1995), to support their claim that severance was improperly denied. In Neal, this court held that the district court erred when it denied severance in a drug conspiracy case in which the "undisputed leader of the conspiracy" gave extensive, specific, and exculpatory testimony both by affidavit and in camera and would have so testified in a separate trial on behalf of the co-defendants. Id. at 1047 & 1047 n. 21. Recognizing that "a defendant might suffer prejudice [from a joint trial] if essential exculpatory evidence that would be available to a defendant tried alone were unavailable in a joint trial," we vacated the convictions of the co-defendants and remanded for a new trial. Id. at 1047 (citing Zafiro v.

United States, 506 U.S. 534, 113 S. Ct. 933 (1993)) (emphasis added).

The appellants' reliance on Neal is misplaced. In Neal, the district court was presented with far more than the conclusory, non-incriminating affidavit offered by Billie Mac; in that case, the defendant gave extensive, specific, and detailed exculpatory testimony. The Neal co-defendants suffered specific and compelling prejudice because their trial had not been severed and the testimony never heard. Here, the appellants did not suffer prejudice since the affidavit did not contain any specific exculpatory testimony. See United States v. Dillman, 15 F.3d 384 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 3010 (1992) (no abuse of discretion in denying severance because of the lack of candor reflected in Dillman's affidavit on behalf of his co-defendants and because the "affidavit was in no sense self-incriminatory; it was in fact self-serving. . . . ").

Billie Mac's self-serving, non-incriminating affidavit offered no evidence that would exculpate the other defendants and, like that in Dillman, did not justify severance. The district court did not abuse its discretion when it denied this motion.

D. Gaudin Error

All of the appellants urge that the Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Gaudin, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 2310 (1995), requires reversal of their convictions. In Gaudin, the Supreme Court held that where materiality is an element of the charged offense, the trial court's failure to submit the question of materiality to the jury violates the defendant's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights. Id. at 2320.

In the present case, the district court instructed the jury on Counts 3, 5, 7, and 10, but not on Count 2, that they "need not consider whether the false statement was a material false statement, even though that language is used in the indictment. This is not a question for the jury to decide." The appellants contend that materiality was an element in each of their counts of conviction and that their constitutional rights were violated when the district court failed to tender to the jury the question of materiality.

The effect of Gaudin error, if any, on the multiple verdicts against these defendants is difficult to unravel. Further, the implications of Gaudin are subject to dispute. Where materiality is an element of the charged crimes, including bank fraud and making false statements to a federally insured institution, Gaudin may cast doubt on the convictions. But as to all defendants except Billie Mac, our discussion is narrowed and simplified by the concurrent sentence doctrine, which holds that so long as a conviction of concurrent crimes can be sustained under any single court, the court need not address any other count. See, e.g., United States v. Strickland, 509 F.2d 273 (5th Cir. 1975); United States v. Rector, 488 F.2d 1079 (5th Cir. 1973).

As to appellants Sutton, Taylor, Novoa and Stanley Jobe, any Gaudin error is rendered irrelevant by the convictions under Count 2 of the indictment for aiding and abetting Billie Mac to commit bank fraud. The government contends, and appellants' counsel conceded at oral argument, that an aiding and abetting conviction does not require proof of materiality, even though the underlying offense of bank fraud requires such proof. To aid and abet an offense, the appellants must share in the criminal intent of the principal and assist the principal's perpetration of a crime. Sutton, Taylor, Novoa and Stanley posit, however, that under the peculiar facts of this case, a necessary finding of materiality is imbedded in all of their Count 2 convictions. Their assertion is based on the fact that Count 2 expressly incorporates paragraph seventeen from Count 1[17]; the Count 2 reference to Count 1 somehow infused it with a materiality requirement for aiding and abetting Billie Mac's bank fraud. This argument is meritless. Paragraph seventeen of Count 1 described the expanded check kite and explained that the kiting scheme was "aided by the occasional deposit of loan proceeds that were obtained fraudulently and used in place of an insufficient check deposit." This language in no way implied that the remaining appellants had to commit fraud in order to aid and abet Billie Mac's bank fraud. Not only is materiality not an issue prerequisite to the Count 2 convictions; those convictions are otherwise properly pleaded and proved against the aiders and abettors.

To secure the Count 2 convictions, the government had to prove "beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant[s] willingly associated [themselves] with a criminal venture and participated therein as something [they] wanted to bring about. Aiding and abetting means to assist the perpetrator of a crime." Cloud, 872 F.2d at 850. Furthermore, "an abettor's criminal intent may be inferred from the attendant facts and circumstances and need not be established by direct evidence." Id.

[17] As discussed earlier, Count 1 charged the appellants with conspiracy to commit bank fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1344, 1005, 1014, and 371.

From all of the evidence and testimony presented to the jury in this case, a rational trier of fact could have decided that the remaining appellants aided and abetted Billie Mac's bank fraud. Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2789 (1979). The jury could have rationally concluded that these appellants had an intent to defraud the banks by facilitating Billie Mac's bank fraud. In United States v. Knipp, 963 F.2d 839, 846 (6th Cir. 1992), the Sixth Circuit affirmed the defendant's aiding and abetting bank fraud conviction where the defendant "allowed . . . [the] overdrafts to continue and that he facilitated the kite to cover them because the overdrafts amounted to huge, unauthorized loans beyond the single customer legal lending limits. . . . " The evidence in the instant case demonstrates that the remaining appellants facilitated Billie Mac's kite in similar and, indeed, more extensive ways. See also, United States v. Sims, 895 F.2d 326 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding that the defendant acted with the intent to defraud was sufficient to sustain his conviction for aiding and abetting attempts to commit a wire fraud against a bank). Because the Count 2 convictions must be affirmed against these appellants without regard to Gaudin error, there is no need to discuss the other concurrent counts of conviction against them.

Gaudin cannot be wholly avoided as to Billie Mac's Count 2 conviction, however, because his conviction for bank fraud does require a finding of materiality as an element of that offense. See, e.g., United States v. Spears, 49 F.3d 1136, 1141 (6th Cir. 1995) ("the determinative factor is the making of the materially false statement with the intent to influence the lender."); United States v. Davis, 989 F.2d 244, 247 (7th Cir. 1993) ("a misrepresentation must be material in order to give rise to liability under the bank fraud statute.").

But even this conclusion does not require reversal of Billie Mac's conviction under Count 2. Billie Mac did not object to the district court's failure to instruct the jury on materiality. As a result, this court reviews his Gaudin claim for plain error. See, e.g., United States v. Keys, 67 F.3d 801 (9th Cir. 1995) (applying plain error analysis and affirming the conviction). Under plain error review, Billie Mac must pass three tests before this court can consider reversal: (1) there was an error; (2) it was clear or obvious; and (3) this error affected the substantial rights of the petitioner. United States v. Calverley, 37 F.3d 160, 162-64 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (citing United States v. Olano, ___ U.S. ___, 113 S. Ct. 1770, 1776-79 (1993)), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1266 (1995). The Supreme Court has, however, explained that even if these factors are established, a court need not exercise its discretion to correct the error unless it seriously affects the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings. Olano, 113 S. Ct. at 1778. Even if we assume that Gaudin error was plain because it became so while the case was on appeal, and even if we assume that failure to instruct the jury was a "structural error" such that Billie Mac is not required to show prejudice, see Keys, supra, 67 F.2d at 810-11, we may still exercise discretion not to reverse the conviction. After carefully considering the record, this court declines to exercise our discretion to correct the Gaudin error for Billie Mac by authorizing a new trial. The evidence against him was overwhelming. Billie Mac has not challenged its sufficiency on appeal. Denying him the formality of a new trial does not effect a fundamental miscarriage of justice. As a result, Billie Mac's conviction and sentence on Count 2 are affirmed. The Gaudin error does not mandate reversal on a plain error standard in this case.

II. Appellants' Individual Challenges to their Convictions[18]

A. Stanley's Challenges to the Sentence Enhancements

The district court imposed two different sentence enhancements on Stanley. The first of these is a two-level enhancement imposed under U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(c) for Stanley's supposed efforts as a manager or supervisor of criminal activity.

Stanley argues that the district court clearly erred when it imposed this enhancement on him because there was no evidence to support the requisite finding under § 3B1.1(c) that he managed or supervised criminal activity. Moreover, the Presentence Report ("PSR"), on which the district court relied, incorrectly concludes that his position as a director of two of the banks involved in the kiting scheme demonstrates that he managed or supervised the criminal activity.

As this court has frequently explained, the decision to enhance a sentencing guideline will be upheld if it "results from a legally correct application of the Guidelines to factual findings that are not clearly erroneous." United States v. Sherrod, 964 F.2d 1501, 1506 (5th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, sub. nom, Cooper v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 113 S. Ct. 832 (1992). Also, a PSR "generally bears sufficient indicia of reliability to be considered as evidence by the trial judge in making the factual determinations required by the guidelines." United States v. Elwood, 999 F.2d 814, 817 (5th Cir. 1993).

Nevertheless, a thorough review of the record lends no support to the district court's finding that Stanley somehow managed or supervised the criminal activity. According to United States v. Ronning, 47 F.3d 710, 711-12 (5th Cir. 1995), § 3B1.1(c) requires that a defendant be the organizer or leader of at least one other participant in the crime and that he assert control or influence over at least that one participant.[19] There is no evidence that Stanley managed or supervised any of his co-defendants or any other people in connection with the illegal acts. Absent such evidence, this court must vacate his sentencing enhancement under § 3B1.1(c).

[19] This is the requirement under § 3B1.1(c) for enhancing Stanley's sentence. As will be discussed later, however, this enhancement is also applicable if the defendant exercised "management responsibility over the property, assets, or activities of a criminal organization." See USSG § 3B1.1(c), comment., n. 2.

The second sentence enhancement imposed on Stanley is not as problematic. Under that enhancement, the district court increased Stanley's offense level two levels because it found that he had "abused a position of public or private trust, or used a special skill, in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense. . . . " § 3B1.3. This provision > encompasses two factors: (1) whether the defendant occupies a position of trust and (2) whether the defendant abused her position in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense. To determine whether the position of trust "significantly facilitated" the commission of the offense, the court must decide whether the defendant occupied a superior position, relative to all people in a position to commit the offense, as a result of her job.

United States v. Fisher, 7 F.3d 69, 70-71 (5th Cir. 1993).

Stanley raises a litany of challenges to this enhancement. For instance, he contends that his ordinary, commercial relationships with the lenders were not trust relationships; that, although he did have a position of trust with two of the banks involved, he did not use this position to further his father's activities; that his acquisition of a loan was not an abuse of trust; that the Deer Creek Spice loan was from CNB where he occupied no position of trust; and that mere knowledge of his father's activities did not constitute an abuse of trust. While the record is admittedly close on this issue, Stanley's PSR found that Stanley was present at an EPSB meeting with bank examiners in early 1991 and was advised at this meeting of his father's check kiting scheme. Also, he was apprised of Billie Mac's overdrafts that had been covered by wire transfers on the Jobe Concrete Products account at FNPB. As discussed earlier, Stanley was on the board of directors at both EPSB and FNPB. Hence, there is some evidence to support the district court's finding that Stanley occupied positions of trust at both banks and used these positions to facilitate or conceal his father's check kiting scheme. Given this evidence, sentence enhancement under § 3B1.3 for abuse of trust was not clearly erroneous.

B. Novoa's Separate Challenges

1. Bruton Claims

Novoa contends that the district court improperly denied his motion to sever, violating his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation as this right was explained by the Supreme Court in Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S. Ct. 1620 (1968). This court has interpreted Bruton to provide that a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation is violated when "(1) several co-defendants are tried jointly, (2) one defendant's extrajudicial statement is used to implicate another defendant in the crime, and (3) the confessor does not take the stand and is thus not subject to cross-examination." United States v. Restrepo, 994 F.2d 173, 186 (5th Cir. 1993). Bruton can be violated when a co-defendant's statement "directly alludes to the complaining defendant." United States v. Beaumont, 972 F.2d 91, 95 (5th Cir. 1992) (quoting United States v. Webster, 734 F.2d 1048, 1054 n. 6 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, sub. nom, Hoskins v. United States, 469 U.S. 1073, 105 S. Ct. 565 (1984)). However, severance is proper only in cases where a "defendant's statement directly incriminates his or her co-defendants without reference to other, admissible evidence." Id. (emphasis added).

Novoa argues that the admission of certain statements by Taylor, through bank examiner Burress, and statements by Billie Mac, through Hale, the credit manager and vice-president of Jobe Concrete Products, violated his Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses.[20] Neither Taylor nor Billie Mac testified at trial.

The first statement to which Novoa objects under Bruton was a statement by Taylor made through bank examiner Burress. At trial, Burress testified as follows:

> Mr. Taylor indicated that on December 29th, the date that check was issued, the cashier, Fernando Novoa, presented him with a check. . . .
> That Fernando Novoa presented the check for him to sign. Mr. Taylor signed the check without verifying that there [sic] collected funds in the account sufficient to pay for the check. His stated reason was that he had faith in the cashier that that was okay. . . .
>
> Next, he indicated he asked – When he was told that the transaction was illegal, he asked cashier Fernando . . . Novoa what happened, what was the reason for this, and he did not get an answer. . . .
> Stephen Taylor indicated that he felt like Fernando Novoa had some checks in his drawer

---

> that were written by Billie Mac Jobe until January 4th, the date that the cashier's check was paid for.[21]

Prior to this testimony, Novoa's counsel objected that the testimony was not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).[22] The trial judge then asked Novoa's counsel whether he was asking that the statement not be considered against his client, and Novoa's counsel responded, "Absolutely." The district court then issued a limiting instruction to the jury that it must consider this testimony only as to Taylor.

Novoa correctly contends that the district court's limiting instruction in this case was powerless to rectify an actual Bruton error. Cruz v. New York, 481 U.S. 186, 190, 107 S. Ct. 1714, 1717-18 (1987). Hence, if the admission of Taylor's statements through Burress violated Bruton, the district court's limiting instruction was ineffective.

But Taylor's statements did not violate Novoa's Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses as this right was explained in Bruton. The statements did not directly incriminate Novoa without reference to other admissible evidence. See Beaumont, 972 F.2d at 95. The only potentially incriminating statement by Taylor suggested that Novoa kept Billie Mac's checks in his drawer until the date on which the cashier's check was paid.[23] At best, this

[21] As was noted earlier, Taylor retracted this allegation in a subsequent conversation with Burress.

[22] Novoa had, of course, also moved for severance prior to trial.

[23] Although Novoa suggests that Taylor's statements also accuse Novoa of having dishonestly orchestrated an 'illegal'

statement was a tentative opinion by Taylor, one that he later retracted; Burress' testimony included Taylor's retraction of his statement. Taken as a whole, none of Taylor's statements through Burress directly incriminated Novoa, so these statements did not run afoul of Bruton.

Furthermore, because the statements did not directly incriminate Novoa without reference to other admissible evidence, the court's limiting instruction is adequate to protect Novoa from any potential prejudice. As this court recently explained in United States v. Leal, ___ F.3d ___, 1996 WL 30673 *5 (5th Cir. 1996), insufficient cashier's check transaction for Jobe, there is no support for this in the record. At most, Taylor suggests that Novoa could not explain why the cashier's check was not posted on bank records for several days. This in no way directly incriminates Novoa.

> [t]he Supreme Court has held that the admission of a nontestifying defendant's confession is permissible if the trial court gives a proper limiting instruction. Marsh v. Richardson, 481 U.S. 200, 107 S. Ct. 1702 (1987). This Court has held that a Bruton problem arises only when the statements clearly implicate the codefendant. United States v. Kelly, 973 F.2d 1145 (5th Cir. 1992). Furthermore, even if a Bruton violation occurs, 'the error may be harmless if the statement's impact is insignificant in light of the weight of other evidence against the defendant.'

(citation omitted) (emphasis added). In Leal, as in the instant case, the proffered statements did not clearly implicate the codefendant and since "[t]here was no

direct implication . . . the limiting instruction was adequate to prevent prejudice." Id. Given both the nature of the proffered statements and the court's limiting instruction, this court concluded in Leal as we do now, that "[t]he district court acted well within its discretion in denying the motion to sever trials." Id.

The second statement to which Novoa objects was a statement by Billie Mac through Hale. At trial, Hale testified as follows:

> I'm uncertain as to the time, but I did have a conversation with Mr. Jobe about deposit slips at El Paso State Bank. . . .
> He told me that he was receiving immediate credit via deposit slips that have been encoded to provide that. . . .
> [By "encoded"] I believe he was referring to the micro encoding at the bottom of the deposit slips. . . .
> Fernando Novoa [was the person at El Paso State Bank who 'had worked it so that he could receive immediate credit with the encoding]. . . .

Careful review of the record demonstrates that Novoa did not object to this testimony.[24]

Although this testimony is admittedly incriminating to Novoa and might raise Bruton concerns, as has been

[24] Earlier in the testimony, Novoa had objected that the government's question inquiring about a period of time, "[b]efore Fernando Novoa came to work for Mr. Billie Mac Jobe and his entities," assumed facts not yet in evidence, but this objection did not relate to the testimony about which Novoa alleges Bruton error; no objection was raised to that testimony.

previously explained, because Novoa failed to object to this testimony, this court will review for plain error. After carefully considering the underlying record, this court declines to exercise its discretion to correct whatever Bruton error this testimony might contain. Even if this court were to grant Novoa's objection to the statements of Billie Mac through Hale and strike these statements from the record, the evidence is nonetheless more than sufficient to affirm Novoa's conviction and sentence under Count 2 for aiding and abetting bank fraud. Given the other, admissible evidence against Novoa, any Bruton error would be harmless, so this court's refusal to rectify it through plain error review does not cause a miscarriage of justice. See, e.g., U.S. v. Kelly, 973 F.2d 1145 (5th Cir. 1992) (applying harmless error analysis to an alleged Bruton error); U.S. v. Cartwright, 6 F.3d 294, 300 (5th Cir. 1993) (holding that no plain Bruton error occurred when the evidence of guilt was overwhelming).

2. Sentence Enhancements

Novoa contends that the district court erred in applying a two level enhancement under § 3B1.1(c) discussed above because he did not manage or supervise any other criminal participant in the check-kiting scheme. He also argues that the district court was clearly erroneous when it refused to grant him a reduction in sentence under § 3B1.2 for his status as a minimal or minor participant in the check kite.

To support his argument that the § 3B1.1(c) enhancement was erroneous, Novoa relies on the language in the commentary accompanying that section that indicates that he must supervise, manage, or control another co-defendant in order to qualify for the enhancement. However, as this court explicitly recognized in Ronning, "[t]he note recognizes an exception to the control requirement if a defendant exercises management responsibility over a criminal organization's property, assets, or activities." Ronning, 47 F.3d at 711. Indeed, the note expressly provides that

> [a]n upward departure may be warranted, however, in the case of a defendant who did not organize, lead, manage, or supervise another participant, but who nevertheless exercised management responsibility over the property, assets, or activities of a criminal organization.

USSG § 3B1.1(c), comment., n. 2.

Because of this exception to the control requirement, the district court was not clearly erroneous when it imposed a two-level sentence enhancement on Novoa under § 3B1.1(c). Novoa exercised management responsibility over the Jobe accounts in both his capacity as EPSB cashier and as head of the wire transfer room. Evidence at trial also suggested that Novoa authorized multiple transfers for Billie Mac on uncollected funds, made it possible for Billie Mac to receive immediate credit on deposits by using special, endorsed deposit slips, and circumvented not only the proof machine's calculation of the float, but also other bank records through the use of special transaction codes. Novoa exercised management responsibility over the Jobe accounts so as to justify a two-level enhancement under § 3B1.1(c).

Novoa also claims that the district court was clearly erroneous when it failed to grant him a sentence reduction under § 3B1.2. This section provides that

> [b]ased on the defendant's role in the offense, decrease the offense level as follows: (a) If the defendant was a minimal participant in any criminal activity, decrease by 4 levels; (b) If the defendant was a minor participant in any criminal activity, decrease by 2 levels. In cases falling between (a) and (b), decrease by 3 levels.

USSG § 3B1.2. On appeal, Novoa claims that he was entitled to a two-level downward adjustment as a "minor participant." The government counters that Novoa has waived this claim since he argued at sentencing for a four-level downward adjustment for his role as a "minimal participant."

The record supports the government's claim that Novoa sought the four-level downward adjustment at sentencing rather than the two-level reduction given to a "minor participant." While this court could conclude that Novoa has waived his claim for treatment as a "minor participant," the district court's denial of this two-level reduction was nonetheless proper because there was ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion that Novoa was more than a minor participant in Billie Mac's check kiting scheme.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this court AFFIRMS the convictions of all of the appellants, VACATES Stanley's managerial or supervisory sentencing enhancement, and REMANDS Stanley for resentencing.

CONVICTIONS AFFIRMED AS TO ALL DEFENDANTS; SENTENCE OF STANLEY JOBE VACATED AND REMANDED.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 94-50646

United States of America,

Plaintiffs-Appellee,

versus

Billie Mac Jobe, Stephen Taylor, Philip Mark Sutton, Stanley Pruet Jobe, and Fernando Novoa, Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas

(Filed Jul. 24, 1996)

Before JONES and STEWART,* Circuit Judges.

EDITH H. JONES, Circuit Judge:

In their petition for rehearing, the appellants Billie Mac Jobe ("Billie Mac"), Stanley Pruet Jobe ("Stanley"), Stephen Taylor, Philip Mark Sutton, and Fernando Novoa raise a number of issues, some of which require further analysis by this court. Specifically, the Supreme Court's holding in Ray v. United States, 481 U.S. 736, 107 S. Ct. 2093 (1987) prevents this court from invoking its concurrent sentence doctrine when a $50 special assessment is imposed on each count of conviction.[1] As a result, this court's original opinion, United States v. Jobe, 77 F.3d 1461 (5th Cir. 1996), is hereby amended as follows. After carefully considering all of the challenges raised by the appellants and the underlying record, this court AFFIRMS all remaining convictions, except that it REVERSES Stanley's conviction as charged in Count 5 for making false statements on a loan application, and REMANDS Novoa for resentencing.[2]

* Like the panel opinion, this amendment is issued by a quorum.

DISCUSSION

I. Conspiracy to Commit Bank Fraud: Count 1

All of the defendants were convicted under Count 1 of conspiring to commit bank fraud in violation of 18

[1] See also 18 U.S.C. § 3013 (providing that district courts shall assess a monetary charge "on any person convicted of an offense against the United States.").

[2] The practical impact of this court's opinion on rehearing will be negligible as each count of conviction supports precisely the same prison sentence. Because the government can collect $50 on each count from each of the appellants, however, Ray requires that this court address convictions that, even if reversed, would have no impact on the prison term of any of the appellants. We echo the concerns recently articulated by Judge Easterbrook for the wisdom of such a requirement:

> But here we are: the prosecution has invested tens of thousands of dollars to obtain the conspiracy convictions . . . and now we are grappling with some thorny issues to determine whether the $50 assessments stand. All to what end? . . . So we trudge on, but with grave doubt the public resources have been wisely deployed.

United States v. Duff, 76 F.3d 122, 124 (7th Cir. 1996).

U.S.C. §§ 1344, 1005, 1014, and 371. All of the defendants urge that their convictions under Count 1 must be reversed because the district court neglected to instruct the jury that materiality was an element of the offense of conspiracy and that, as a result, their constitutional rights were violated when the district court failed to tender this issue to the jury.[3] Further, three of the defendants, Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe, contend that their convictions under Count 1 must also be reversed for lack of sufficient evidence. Upon close examination, neither of these arguments has any merit nor requires reversal of the Count 1 convictions.

All of the appellants contend that the Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Gaudin, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 2310 (1995), requires reversal of their convictions under Count 1. In Gaudin, the Supreme Court explained that where materiality is an element of the charged offense, the district court's failure to submit the question of materiality to the jury violates the defendant's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights. Id. at ___, 115 S. Ct. at 2320. Although they cite no controlling precedent, the appellants suggest that materiality is an element of their convictions for conspiring to commit bank fraud. Because the jury was not explicitly instructed to determine the question of materiality under Count 1, the

[3] The district court instructed the jury on Counts 3, 5, 7, and 10, but not on Count 1, that they "need not consider whether the false statement was a material false statement, even though that language is used in the indictment. This is not a question for the jury to decide."

appellants conclude that after Gaudin, their convictions under Count 1 must be reversed.

As this court explained in our original opinion, the effect of the Gaudin error, if any, on the multiple verdicts against these defendants is difficult to identify. For instance, the threshold inquiry whether materiality is an element of the convictions for conspiracy to commit bank fraud is subject to dispute. While bank fraud does require a finding of materiality as an element of that offense, see, e.g., United States v. Spears, 49 F.3d 1136, 1141 (6th Cir. 1995); United States v. Davis, 989 F.2d 244, 247 (7th Cir. 1993), the parties cite no caselaw expressly deciding whether materiality is likewise an element of the offense of conspiring to commit bank fraud.[4]

However, as previously noted, Count 1 charged each of the defendants with conspiracy to commit bank fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1344, 1005, 1014, and 371. Section 371 is the general conspiracy statute, prohibiting any conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States or to defraud it. The other statutes referenced in Count 1, if prosecuted as independent offenses, would require the government to prove and the jury to find materiality. Section 1005, for instance, prohibits the making of false entries in any book, report, or statement of a federally insured bank with the intent to injure or defraud the bank. Materiality is an element of that offense. See, e.g., United States v. Jackson, 621 F.2d 216, 219 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Rapp, 871 F.2d 957, 963-64

[4] This court's own extensive search of the caselaw has also failed to identify such an authority.

(11th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, sub. nom., Bazarian v. United States, 493 U.S. 890, 110 S. Ct. 233 (1989). Section 1344, the statutory prohibition against bank fraud and, as discussed above, § 1014, which criminalizes the knowing use of false statements in loan applications to federally insured banks, both require material false statements. See, e.g., United States v. Kelley, 615 F.2d 378, 380 (5th Cir. 1980); Rapp, 871 F.2d at 964.

Given this statutory framework, while it is likely that the offense of conspiracy to commit bank fraud would also require the government to prove materiality, this court need not resolve that issue. Critically, none of the appellants objected at trial to the district court's failure to instruct the jury on materiality in Count 1 or in any other count. As a result, this court reviews the Gaudin claim of the appellants for plain error. See, e.g., United States v. Randazzo, 80 F.3d 623 (1st Cir. 1996); United States v. DiDomenico, 78 F.3d 294 (7th Cir. 1996); United States v. Kramer, 73 F.3d 1067 (11th Cir. 1996); United States v. Keys, 67 F.3d 801 (9th Cir. 1995), reh'g en banc granted, 78 F.3d 465 (9th Cir. 1996). Under plain error review, before this court can even consider reversing the appellants' convictions, the appellants must demonstrate that (1) there was an error; (2) it was clear or obvious; and that (3) this error affected their substantial rights. United States v. Calverley, 37 F.3d 160, 162-64 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (citing United States v. Olano, 507 U.S. 725, 113 S. Ct. 1770, 1776-79 (1993)), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1266 (1995). Even if the appellants satisfy this burden, the Supreme Court has explained that this court need not exercise its discretion to correct the error unless it seriously affects the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings. Olano, 507 U.S. at ___, 113 S. Ct. at 1778. Hence, as this court detailed in its original opinion, even if we assume that Gaudin error was plain because it became so after the trial and only on appeal, and even if we assume that the failure to instruct the jury on materiality was a "structural error" such that the appellants are not required to show prejudice, see Keys, supra, 67 F.3d at 810-11, we may still decline to exercise discretion to reverse the convictions. As noted in the previous opinion, this court thoroughly considered the record and the overwhelming evidence adduced by the government at trial. Although much of the evidence is circumstantial as to the existence of a conspiracy, it is more than sufficient to support the convictions under Count 1. The fact that none of the appellants seriously contested the materiality of false statements or entries, moreover, strongly suggests that materiality was indisputable. Consistent with our previous determination regarding Count 2, this court declines to exercise discretion to correct for the appellants the alleged Gaudin error on Count 1 by reversing their convictions. This result does not effect a fundamental miscarriage of justice.

Having declined to exercise our discretion to correct any alleged Gaudin error in Count 1, the only remaining challenge to the convictions for conspiracy to commit bank fraud suggests that the evidence against Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe is insufficient to support these convictions. In order to establish a conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 371, the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of an agreement between two or more people to violate a law of the United States and that any one of the conspirators committed an overt act in furtherance of that agreement. See, e.g., United States v. Faulkner, 17 F.3d 745, 768 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 193 (1994); United States v. Chaney, 964 F.2d 437, 449 (5th Cir. 1992). The government must also prove that the defendant knew of the conspiracy and voluntarily participated in it. Chaney, 964 F.2d at 449.

Given this burden and the extensive evidence in this case, the challenge raised by Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting their convictions is meritless. The standard of review is whether, viewing the evidence and all reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the government, a "reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence established guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." United States v. Mergerson, 4 F.3d 337, 341 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1310 (1994). This court's original opinion carefully details the extensive evidence supporting the convictions of Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe. From all of the evidence and testimony presented to the jury in this case, a rational trier of fact could easily have decided that Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe conspired to commit bank fraud. Put differently, a rational jury could have concluded that Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe were knowing, voluntary participants in an agreement to commit bank fraud and that overt acts were committed in furtherance of that agreement; their convictions under Count 1 are affirmed.

II. Making False Bank Entries: Counts 4, 6, and 16

The jury convicted Sutton under Counts 4 and 6 of making false bank entries. Taylor was also convicted of a similar offense under Count 16. Finally, Stanley Jobe was convicted under Count 6 of aiding and abetting the making of a false bank entry. The three appellants raise two broad challenges to their convictions: the first, a Gaudin claim; the second, a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence underlying the jury's verdicts. Specifically, Sutton raises a Gaudin challenge to his convictions under Counts 4 and 6, and Stanley Jobe echoes this challenge to his conviction under Count 6. Taylor argues that there was insufficient evidence to sustain his conviction under Count 16, while Stanley Jobe similarly challenges the sufficiency of the evidence for his Count 6 conviction.

Count 4 charges that Sutton made false entries in the books, reports, and statements of Continental National Bank ("CNB") with the intent to deceive the national bank examiners, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1005 and 2. Count 6 makes similar allegations under the same statutes, charging that Sutton made a material false entry with regard to the Deer Creek Spice loan in the records of Continental National Bank and that this entry was aided and abetted by Stanley Jobe. As discussed earlier, materiality is an element of the offense proscribed by § 1005. See, e.g., Jackson, 621 F.2d at 219; Rapp, 871 F.2d at 963-64 (1989).[5] By contrast, § 2 simply provides in relevant part that those who aid or abet an offense against the United States will be criminally liable as principals. As this court explained in its original opinion in this case, materiality is not a prerequisite to convictions for aiding and abetting under § 2. See Jobe, 77 F.3d at 1475 (although bank fraud requires materiality, aiding and abetting bank fraud has no such requirement).

[5] The language of the indictment in both Counts 4 and 6 also charges that the false entries were material.

Because § 1005 requires the government to prove materiality, Sutton's Gaudin challenge is the sole plausible constitutional attack on his convictions for Counts 4 and 6, and since neither Sutton nor any of the other appellants objected at trial to the district court's failure to instruct the jury on materiality in Counts 4 and 6, the attack is limited to plain error. Sutton has never questioned the sufficiency of the evidence to support these convictions. We decline to grant relief to Sutton for the Gaudin error.

But Stanley Jobe challenges Count 6 for Gaudin plain error and on the additional ground that there is insufficient evidence to support his conviction for aiding and abetting the making of a materially false bank entry. After reviewing the evidence and all of its reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the government, we are persuaded that a reasonable jury could have concluded that Stanley Jobe aided and abetted the making of a materially false bank entry at CNB. Though we need not recount the evidence adduced at trial,[6] the jury could have reasonably concluded that Stanley Jobe had aided and abetted the making of the materially false statement in CNB records that the purpose of the Deer Creek Spice loan was to finance the acquisition of inventory; hence, his conviction under Count 6 is supported by sufficient evidence. The strength of the evidence that Stanley assisted his father and Sutton in procuring the Deer Creek Spice loan under false pretenses persuades us that appellate discretion need not be exercised to correct the lack of a materiality charge.

The sole, remaining challenge to a false entry conviction is raised by Taylor, who urges that his conviction under Count 16 is not supported by sufficient evidence. Count 16 alleged that on December 29, 1989, Taylor signed and issued a cashier's check for over $3,500,000 to Billie Mac Jobe, yet failed to disclose and detail this transaction in El Paso State Bank records until several days later on January 4, 1990. The trial was replete with evidence supporting Taylor's conviction under Count 16 and after examining the record and evidence in the light most favorable to the government, this court affirms the conviction as a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Taylor made a materially false entry in the EPSB records.

III. Making False Statements on a Loan Application: Count 5

Stanley Jobe was the sole defendant convicted by the jury under Count 5 of making false statements on a loan application, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014. Stanley Jobe attacks his conviction under Count 5, contending that it is infirm both because of Gaudin error and because it is plagued by insufficient evidence.

To prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014, the government must demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that "(1) the defendant made a false statement to a financial institution; (2) the defendant made the false statement knowingly; (3) he did so for the purpose of influencing the financial institution's action; and (4) the statement was false as to a material fact." United States v. Thompson, 811 F.2d 841, 844 (5th Cir. 1987). Even viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the government, Stanley Jobe's conviction for making a false statement on a loan application is not supported by sufficient evidence.

Under Count 5, the government's theory of false statement is that Stanley Jobe misrepresented that the purpose of the Deer Creek Spice loan was to finance the acquisition of inventory, when its real purpose was to Billie Mac's overdrawn account. The government further suggests that this intentional misrepresentation was entered on a loan application made by Stanley Jobe at CNB, dated May 18, 1990. CNB was allegedly influenced by the false statement, which was relied upon by bank officers in the bank's loan approval committee.

But the record does not support the government's assertion that Stanley Jobe made a false statement on a loan application at CNB. In fact, it is undisputed that Stanley made no direct representations concerning the loan.[7] He was neither the borrower nor the payee of the proceeds, although he was a guarantor. Moreover, Stanley Jobe did not sign any loan application at CNB on May 18, 1990; in fact, there was no loan application whatsoever, but only a loan presentation form that was compiled by CNB employees and unsigned by Stanley. The promissory note was actually signed by Frank Owen. At no time during trial did the government introduce into evidence a loan application on which Stanley Jobe made a false statement. The government never offered testimony that Stanley directly caused a bank officer or anyone else to place false information on the loan application. Because the government's evidence at trial was insufficient to allow a reasonable juror to conclude that Stanley was guilty of making false statements on a loan application, his Count 5 conviction is reversed.[8]

IV. Novoa's Sentence Enhancements

On rehearing, Novoa again urges that the district court erred in applying a two level enhancement under § 3B1.1(c) because he did not manage or supervise any other criminal participant in the check-kiting scheme. Novoa relies on the language in the commentary accompanying § 3B1.1(c) that indicates that he must supervise, manage, or control another co-defendant in order to qualify for the enhancement.

As this court explained in its original opinion, the record supports the conclusion that Novoa exercised management responsibility over the Jobe accounts. This type of managerial control may warrant an upward departure from the sentencing range under the management of

[8] While this court holds that no reasonable jury could conclude that Stanley Jobe made false statements on a loan application as charged in Count 5, as we have already explained, a reasonable jury could have concluded that Stanley aided and abetted the making of false statements on the Deer Creek Spice loan as charged in Count 6.

assets theory described in USSG § 3B1.1(c), comment., n. 2.

Novoa has correctly pointed out that the district court did not impose a departure, and this court's reasoning in adverting to grounds for a departure was incorrect. The district court imposed a two-level upward adjustment under § 3B1.1(c) for Novoa's alleged role as an organizer, leader, manager, or supervisor of criminal activity. However, such an adjustment is proper only if Novoa was the organizer or leader of at least one other participant in the crime and if he asserted control or influence over at least that one participant. See United States v. Ronning, 47 F.3d 710, 711-12 (5th Cir. 1995). Because the record contains no evidence that Novoa managed or supervised any of his co-defendants or any other people in connection with the illegal check kite, this court must vacate the district court's upward adjustment of Novoa's sentence and remand for resentencing.

V. Factual Clarification

In this court's original discussion of the facts of this case, we noted that "in late 1989, Jobe Concrete Products purchased a spice plant from the Baltimore Spice Co. for nearly $3,500,000 and Cal-Tex Spice Co." Jobe, 77 F.3d at 1466. The appellants now explain that this is technically incorrect, as Jobe Concrete Products was not actually the legal entity that purchased the relevant spice plant. Instead, the spice plant was purchased by Cal-Tex Spice Co., owned by Billie Mac Jobe and Frank Owen V. Because the appellants allege that this technical misstatement may somehow affect Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., our original opinion is hereby amended to clarify that the purchaser of the spice plant was actually Cal-Tex Spice Co. This factual amendment has no effect whatsoever on any of the reasoning or legal conclusions of either the original opinion or the instant one.

VI. Other Issues raised on Rehearing

The court has carefully considered other issues raised on rehearing by appellants and finds them meritless.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this court on rehearing AFFIRMS all of the remaining convictions, except that it REVERSES Stanley's conviction as charged in Count 5 for making false statements on a loan application, and REMANDS Novoa for resentencing.

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 94-50646

United States of America,

Plaintiffs-Appellee,

versus

Billie Mac Jobe, Stephen Taylor, Philip Mark Sutton, Stanley Pruet Jobe, and Fernando Novoa, Defendants-Appellants.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas

(Filed Dec. 5, 1996)

OPINION ON SECOND SET OF MOTIONS FOR REHEARING

Before JONES, STEWART and PARKER,* Circuit Judges.

EDITH H. JONES, Circuit Judge:

The court herewith substitutes the following opinion for its previous opinion, 77 F.3d 1461 and opinion on rehearing, 90 F.3d 920:

* After oral argument, Judge Parker recused himself from any further participation in this matter. This opinion reflects only that of Judges Jones and Stewart.

Appellants Billie Mac Jobe ("Billie Mac"), Stanley Pruet Jobe ("Stanley"), Stephen Taylor, Philip Mark Sutton and Fernando Novoa were convicted by a jury of various offenses undertaken to organize, conduct, and maintain an elaborate and expanded check-kiting scheme through El Paso banks for over a year and a half. On appeal, they pose numerous challenges to their convictions and sentences. After carefully considering these challenges and the underlying record, this court AFFIRMS the convictions for all of the appellants, except that we vacate Stanley's convictions on Counts 5 and 6, and we vacate Stanley's and Novoa's managerial or supervisory sentencing enhancements and REMAND these two defendants for resentencing.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND[1]

The appellants were indicted for bank fraud, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1344 and 2, and for conspiracy to commit bank fraud, to make false entries in bank records, and to obtain loans via false statements in loan applications, contravening 18 U.S.C. § 371. In addition, the indictment charged that some or all of the appellants had made false statements on loan applications,[2] false bank entries, reports, and transactions,[3] laundered funds,[4] or aided and abetted such activities.[5] The indictment requested a criminal forfeiture of property.[6]

The district court bifurcated the criminal trial and the request for criminal forfeiture. After nearly two weeks of trial on the criminal charges, the jury returned the following verdicts: all defendants were convicted of conspiracy to commit bank fraud ("Count 1"); Billie Mac was convicted of bank fraud, while Stanley, Taylor, Sutton, and Novoa were convicted of aiding and abetting this bank fraud ("Count 2"); Taylor and Sutton were convicted of making false bank entries in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1005 and 2 (collectively, Counts 4, 6, and 16); and Stanley was convicted both of aiding and abetting Sutton to make a false bank entry (Count 6) and of making false statements on a bank loan application (Count 5).[7]

Although each appellant was convicted by the jury of various offenses undertaken to organize, conduct, and maintain an elaborate check kiting scheme, at the sentencing hearing, the district court found no evidence of monetary loss to any of the financial institutions involved. In part for this reason, the appellants received light concurrent sentences: Billie Mac was sentenced to eighteen months incarceration and fined $30,000; Stanley received five months incarceration, five months of community confinement in a residential facility or half-way house, and a $15,000 fine; Taylor, ten months incarceration; Sutton, ten months incarceration; and Novoa, five months incarceration and five months of community confinement in a residential facility or half-way house; the appellants were also ordered to serve three-year terms of supervised release.

A discussion of some of the voluminous evidence concerning the appellants' relationships to the involved financial institutions and the crucial transactions involved in the prosecution is necessary to understand this opinion's analysis.

Billie Mac was a 1/3 owner, officer and director of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., in El Paso, Texas. He also owned the Jobe Bar Track Ranch and was a part owner, officer and director of Cal-Tex Spice Co. He and his son, Stanley, owned a 40% share of First Park National Bank ("FPNB") of Livingston, Montana, a federally insured financial institution. Billie Mac maintained checking accounts at FPNB as well as at El Paso State Bank ("EPSB"), a federally insured, state chartered bank in El Paso; Jobe Concrete Products and Cal-Tex Spice had checking accounts at EPSB. Billie Mac was a shareholder of EPSB.

Stanley, Billie Mac's son, was president and a 1/3 owner of Jobe Concrete Products, Inc., a partial owner and director of Cal-Tex Spice Co. and a shareholder and director of EPSB. At FPNB in Montana, Stanley maintained a checking account and sat on the board of directors.

The remaining appellants are employees of some of the financial institutions involved. Taylor was the president of EPSB. Novoa, as a cashier and officer of EPSB, approved significant wire transfer transactions involving Billie Mac. After leaving his employment with EPSB, Novoa became president of Cal-Tex Spice and performed various financial and administrative work for Jobe Concrete Products. Sutton was the president of another federally insured bank used in the kite, Continental National Bank ("CNB").

The scope of the expanded check kite was uncovered essentially by FBI special agent Randy Wolverton ("Wolverton"), whose analysis is of the activity in several Jobe checking accounts from December of 1989 through July of 1991, revealed that a large kite was underway involving Billie Mac and Stanley and their checking accounts at CNB, TCB, FNPB, and EPSB.

In order to manipulate and maximize the float, or lag time between transactions in the banking system, Billie Mac and his cohorts inflated his account balances artificially by making countless wire transfers based on uncollected funds, by writing checks against uncollected or nonexistent funds, and by consummating fraudulent loans that were camouflaged by false entries or statements in bank records. As a result of these machinations, very large checks were routinely paid in full despite the actual insufficiency of funds to cover them. Billie Mac's check kite was remarkably efficient; unlike the vast majority of check kites, this one not only stayed constantly ahead of the lag but never did self-destruct. Evidence at trial demonstrated that none of the checks written by Billie Mac was ever dishonored or returned for insufficient funds, and all of the loans used to commence the kiting scheme were paid in full and with interest to the lenders.

Further evidence of the "success" of the check-kiting is revealed by the vast sums of money floated. Wolverton testified that bank records for December 1, 1989 through March 12, 1990, created the impression that $150,000,000 had been deposited into the Jobe accounts, although less than 15% of that figure, or approximately $20,000,000, was actually present in these accounts. Similarly, from April through June of 1991, Wolverton explained that although bank records indicated that $58,000,000 was deposited into these accounts, "77% of those, or about $44,000,000 worth of those deposits, were nothing more than checks and wire transfers being exchanged with each other through these accounts, thereby artificially inflating the accounts." Only $13,000,000 was actually deposited into the accounts.

Profits from the scheme were used to finance business ventures for Billie Mac and Stanley. For example, in late 1989, Cal-Tex Spice Co., co-owned by Billie Mac, purchased a spice plant from the Baltimore Spice Co. for nearly $3,500,000. Austin Hale ("Hale"), the credit manager and eventually vice-president of Jobe Concrete Products, testified that neither Jobe Concrete Products nor Billie Mac had enough liquidity to fund these purchases. Hale further testified that Stanley concurred and expressed his concern to Hale that the company needed cash not only to finance its investment and business activities, but also so that his father, who was "overly stressed about the situation", would not need to work as hard.

Billie Mac commenced the kite by opening a checking account for the Jobe Bar Track Ranch at CNB. Before it was officially opened, Billie Mac wrote himself a check from the new account or starter booklet for $990,000, endorsed this check, and deposited it at EPSB. The opening balance of the CNB checking account was, however, only $1,000. Sutton was the account officer at CNB supervising the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account.

After the CNB check was deposited at EPSB, EPSB issued a cashier's check for $3,536,347 to Billie Mac signed by Taylor, the bank president. Although standard banking practice would require EPSB to post an entry in its books or records indicating that the cashier's check had been issued, no such entry was made in EPSB records that day; in fact, no entry was made into EPSB records until several days later on January 4, 1990. Nearly a week earlier, on the same afternoon that he obtained the EPSB check, Billie Mac used this cashier's check to purchase the spice plant.

When the original $990,000 CNB check was presented for payment at that bank, Martha Karlsruher ("Karlsruher"), a senior vice president and bank cashier, noticed that this large check had been written on the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account before it had opened and that the balance in the account was merely $1,000. She immediately advised Sutton of her findings, but he authorized forced payment of the check nonetheless, explaining that a pending loan from CNB to Billie Mac would provide the necessary funds.

As Sutton had explained, CNB did lend Billie Mac $925,000, its legal lending limit, on January 8, 1990 and back-dated this loan to January 5. The loan's stated purpose was to "[r]eplenish personal liquidity utilized in the purchase of Baltimore Spice of Texas." However, the loan did not replenish Billie Mac's personal liquidity, but was rather deposited directly into the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account, so that the $990,000 check that had been presented for payment could clear. Karlsruher further explained that because the bank's management and loan committee were "in a hurry to fund the loan [and] disburse the monies to the customer," they did not review Billie Mac's loan application before approving it.

This type of suspicious activity continued in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account and in other accounts including the Jobe Concrete Products checking account at Texas Commerce Bank ("TCB"). In February or March of 1990, Hale, Jobe Concrete's credit manager, learned that Billie Mac was signing checks on the Jobe Concrete Products account but failing to list either a payee or amount on the company's check log. Hale began to be "suspicious of a check kite." As these suspicions grew, he "started looking for another job" and eventually quit in November of 1991.

The check kiting activity also became more obvious to employees in the banks used in the kite. For instance, from January through July of 1990, Karlsruher, who had already noticed unusual activity in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account at CNB and had discussed this with Sutton, warned Sutton repeatedly that she suspected kiting by Billie Mac and that any further loans to him would exceed CNB's legal limit. Sutton assured her that "it was a normal business practice for certain companies to operate this way," but Karlsruher disagreed and had not observed such practice in her experience as a banker.

Sutton's actions began to breach standard banking practice or policy. He occasionally extended CNB's closing deadline in order to give Billie Mac sufficient time to deposit or wire funds to cover overdrafts.[8] Karlsruher testified that Billie Mac was virtually the only customer who received such specialized treatment.[9] Further, despite express warnings from Karlsruher that kiting was going on and that a criminal referral should be filed regarding Billie Mac's activities, Sutton continued to approve forced payment of countless checks written by Billie Mac far in excess of the balance in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account at CNB. Although Karlsruher could have filed a criminal referral regarding the activity, she explained that she did not do so because she was "provided a copy of a board resolution that ordered management not to file this referral."

Others associated and employed by CNB, who could not help but notice that Sutton was approving numerous forced payments on checks written by Billie Mac, came to share Karlsruher's concerns about the check kite. Patrick Kennedy ("Kennedy"), CNB's attorney, reviewed some of

[8] The closing deadline at CNB was normally 2:00 p.m. If the bank could not settle its funds by that time, these funds were not available for overnight investment and the bank risked losing the corresponding overnight interest.

[9] As Karlsruher explained, "[t]he only [other customer] that comes to mind, but that was a few years later, that [sic] would have been El Paso Auction."

Billie Mac's activities in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account and suggested that CNB file a criminal referral. Although Kennedy repeatedly attempted to discuss this suggestion with Sutton and to obtain additional information from him, Sutton was unresponsive. Patricia McLean ("McLean"), CNB's loan review officer, not only suggested that a criminal referral be filed, but also expressed concerns to Sutton that if CNB continued to lend to Billie Mac or any affiliated entity, the bank might exceed its legal lending limits. Yet again, these warnings went unheeded.

Indeed, loan activity at CNB involving the Jobes continued. On May 21, 1990, with Sutton acting as the bank's loan officer, CNB funded a $750,000 loan to Deer Creek Spice Co., guaranteed by Stanley. In a loan presentation form, an internal document prepared by bank employees, the purpose of the Deer Creek Spice loan was described as acquisition of inventory, and the loan principals were listed as Stanley and Frank Owen IV. Although the size of the Deer Creek Spice loan mandated review by CNB's management loan committee, no such review occurred.

On the very day that the Deer Creek Spice loan was authorized, Stanley endorsed the check for the proceeds and turned it over to Billie Mac who, in turn, deposited it into the cashier's checking account at EPSB. The proceeds of the Deer Creek Spice loan were used to pay for cashier's checks that Billie Mac had obtained from EPSB earlier in the day. These cashier's checks had been deposited at CNB to allow a $750,000 check written against the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account to clear; not surprisingly, the $750,000 check had been written by Billie Mac and was payable to him.

Eventually, Sutton, Karlsruher, and McLean were asked to meet with Kennedy, John Wright, the chairman of the board of CNB, and Jack Cardwell, a board member, to discuss Billie Mac's relations with the bank. After the meeting, Karlsruher testified that Sutton ordered her not to contact either bank directors or bank attorneys without his preclearance; he threatened to fire her or any other employee who filed a criminal referral on Billie Mac and promised her a promotion and raise for her cooperation. Sutton stressed to her that a criminal referral on Billie Mac "would cause [the Jobes] serious financial harm and set-backs and that the other banks they were dealing with may call their loans . . . once an investigation ensued." Finally, however, after a CNB board meeting in June of 1990, the Jobe Bar Track Ranch checking account was closed and Billie Mac paid CNB for his use of uncollected funds an amount equal to what the bank would have earned in an overnight investment of those funds at the federal funds rate. Of course, as Karlsruher explained, the federal funds rate is lower than the commercial loan rate.

Undaunted, Billie Mac and his cohorts continued their expanded check kite even after the CNB account closed. Loans from other banks were used to float the kite, and unconventional wire transfer procedures both inflated checking account balances artificially and concealed insufficient funds or overdrafts. Unlike checks, wire transfers experience no float or lag time. When a normal electronic wire transfer occurs, funds are simultaneously deducted from the transferring institution's account at the Federal Reserve and credited to the recipient's bank account.

But Billie Mac's multiple wire transfers were not conventional ones. Taylor, the president of EPSB, and Novoa, the bank's cashier and senior officer in charge of accounting and of the wire transfer room, authorized wire transfer personnel to credit Billie Mac's checks immediately and to make wire transfers for him without waiting for the necessary funds to be collected.[10] Diana Vincent, an internal auditor with EPSB, testified that the countless wire transfers completed for Billie Mac on uncollected funds violated standard EPSB policy that all wires be paid for with collected funds. Vincent also testified that had Billie Mac been forced to comply with bank policy and deposit sufficient funds before conducting a wire transfer, his insufficient accounts would have appeared on the bank's uncollected funds or overdraft reports. Billie Mac's accounts escaped these reports because Novoa was initialing most of Billie Mac's checks and approving them for immediate credit.[11] According to Laura Avila an employee in the EPSB wire transfer room, both Novoa and Taylor would initial the checks to authorize immediate credit.

Because of the specialized treatment that Billie Mac received from Taylor and Novoa at EPSB, he made the bank's wire transfer department a second home, visiting

[10] Although this practice is unconventional, the government concedes that it is not necessarily illegal. Banks enjoy some discretion to extend immediate or "next day" credit on uncollected funds.

several times daily from January through September of 1990 and sending hundreds of wire transfers during that time. At trial, the testimony of Avila and Maria Reyes Novoa's administrative assistant who supervised the wire transfer room, indicated that Billie Mac's transfers began at around $50,000 a day, but quickly grew to $500,000 and then to a combined daily total of $1,000,000.

These frantic and unconventional wire transfers led other employees at EPSB to suspect kiting. For instance, Reyes grew concerned about the fact that Billie Mac was allowed to conduct wire transfers when his accounts were insufficient to pay for these transfers. Reyes recounted that once, after she had verified that the account against which Billie Mac had intended to pay for the transfer had insufficient funds, she took the check to Novoa and, although she did not expressly inform him of the insufficiency, he ordered her to proceed with the wire transfer. As this transfer activity continued, Reyes eventually spoke with Taylor, but to no avail. She explained, "[s]ince I was concerned, I went and asked [Taylor], you know, if he was aware that the checks were, you know, going through. And he told me that he was going to check into it and that he would get back to me. But he never got back to me."

Yvonne Pearson, an employee in the proof department at EPSB, testified that since Billie Mac was allowed to conduct transfers on uncollected funds, proof department employees were allowed to override the proof machine's time consuming determination of the float for a check. To circumvent the proof machine, Billie Mac's checks were deposited using special deposit slips initialed by bank officers to allow for next-day availability; most of these deposit slips were initialed by her boss, Novoa. Furthermore, when Billie Mac would present such a deposit slip, a special transaction code would be entered into the bank's records that would prevent the checks from appearing on the bank's uncollected funds report. Because of these suspicious activities and practices, Pearson concluded that she "knew" that Billie Mac was kiting checks.

Vincent, EPSB's internal auditor, warned Taylor in a memorandum that Billie Mac was kiting checks "to the tune of $790,000 to $1,760,000 a day, and this amount is steadily increasing," as well as conducting wire transfers on uncollected funds. Moreover, she explained that Taylor's and Novoa's decision to extend Billie Mac next day availability on checks made it difficult to ascertain the full extent of the ongoing kite. Taylor delayed responding to Vincent for nearly three weeks before asking her "to track the activity for a few days and report back to him."

Vincent did exactly that. After tracking Billie Mac's accounts for two days, she sent Taylor another memorandum detailing transactions in which Billie Mac was given more than $3,200,000 in immediate credit to pay for wire transfers from EPSB. After Taylor received this memo, Vincent testified that to her knowledge, Taylor did not take any remedial action and did not speak with her about either the memo or the activity which had been tracked.

Even Billie Mac's own employees began to question the deposit and wire transfer activity at EPSB. Hale, the vice president of Jobe Concrete Products, testified that he had a conversation with Billie Mac regarding this activity.

According to Hale, Billie Mac explained that Novoa had developed a system by which he could receive immediate credit for deposits merely by using special deposit slips.[12] Eventually, Novoa resigned his position at EPSB and went to work for his esteemed customer, Billie Mac, as president of Cal-Tex Spice and at Jobe Concrete Products.

Upon Novoa's departure from EPSB, Barbara Baker ("Baker"), the acting cashier for the bank, learned about the practice of allowing Billie Mac to conduct wire transfers on uncollected funds. She testified that this practice did not leave a good audit trail and impeded the bank's ability to analyze float and collectability of Billie Mac's checks. Baker then sent Taylor a memo reiterating these conclusions and suggesting that funds be collected from Billie Mac before he be allowed to conduct a wire transfer.

After sending the memo to Taylor, Baker met with him. She testified that during this meeting, Taylor appeared shocked by the activity in Billie Mac's accounts; as Baker recalled, "[Taylor] had the memo in his hand and he just kind of shook his head a little bit and said, 'Billie Mac is kiting. How long did he think he could get away with this?' " Taylor then gathered the copies of Baker's memo and "threw them in the trash and he said he wanted all the copies out of circulation. He didn't want any copies of the memo in the bank." However, even after receiving memoranda from both Baker and

[12] On appeal, Novoa objects to this portion of Hale's testimony under Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S. Ct. 1620 (1968). The objection will be discussed infra.

Vincent, Taylor still approved wire transfers for Billie Mac on uncollected funds.

Perhaps exhausted by his daily trips to the wire room at EPSB, Billie Mac began wiring funds from CNB where he no longer had an account. Much as Taylor and Novoa had ordered at EPSB, Sutton authorized Billie Mac to conduct wire transfers on uncollected funds, even though no other customer was regularly extended such a privilege. However, these transactions, unlike the transfers at EPSB, were appearing regularly on the bank's "deficit available balance report" as suffering from a large, uncollected balance. Sutton approached Karlsruher with a proposal to give Billie Mac's checks a special transaction code which would camouflage them from the bank's reporting system. She refused to participate in such a scheme.

The very day that bank examiners arrived at CNB to analyze the transfer activity, Billie Mac stopped making wire transfers from that bank. As the bank examiners analyzed accounts at CNB and at EPSB, they began to discover the vast extent of Billie Mac's kiting scheme. For instance, while EPSB was lending Billie Mac and Stanley over $1,000,000 each year, the bank's average collected balances were negative.

While the bank examiners continued to investigate, Taylor spoke to Tom Burress ("Burress"), one of the examiners analyzing loans and accounts at EPSB. Taylor wanted to explain the cashier's check for over $3,500,000 that Billie Mac had been given on December 29, 1989, without any confirmation that he had sufficient funds to pay for it. Taylor told Burress "[t]hat Fernando Novoa presented the check for him to sign. Taylor signed the check without verifying that there [sic] collected funds in the account sufficient to pay for the check. His stated reason was that he had faith in the cashier that that [sic] was okay." Taylor also told Burress that he believed that Novoa had held some checks written by Billie Mac in his desk until January 4, 1990, the date on which the cashier's check was actually purchased. The next day, however, Taylor changed his story, suggesting that "he was wrong in accusing [Novoa] of holding the checks in his drawer. And prior to this occurrence, he had no reason to fault [Novoa's] work."[13]

As the involvement of bank examiners and federal agents intensified, Billie Mac's expanded check kite came to a crashing halt. At trial, there was substantial disagreement over the loss, if any, that the banks involved in this kite had suffered. All of the loans and checks had been paid and honored. From this fact, Rene Pena ("Pena"), a certified public accountant who testified as a defense expert, concluded that the banks had suffered no loss. Although Pena recognized that the various Jobe accounts were frequently in overdraft, he noted that this overdraft was usually corrected quickly. According to Pena, Billie Mac was merely "actively utilizing the loans in a constant cash management . . . of running the [Jobe] entities as a whole."

DISCUSSION

I. Appellants' Common Challenges to their Convictions

A. Juror Misconduct

Billie Mac, Stanley, Sutton, and Novoa appeal the district court's denial of an evidentiary hearing to investigate allegations of juror misconduct and its denial of their motions for a new trial based partially on this alleged misconduct.

Appellants complain that during the trial, John A. Shamaley ("Shamaley"), one of the jurors, was told by a relative that Billie Mac had "previously been convicted in another bank fraud case." In an affidavit submitted to the district court, Shamaley explained that at some time during the trial, he told David Carnes a relative, that Carnes's employer, Jack Cardwell had been mentioned during the trial; Cardwell was a member of the board of directors of CNB. Carnes told Shamaley that Billie Mac had previously been convicted of bank fraud and suggested to Shamaley that because of this prior conviction, "he would not be at all surprised to find that something improper was going on here." However, Shamaley acknowledged in his affidavit that

> [t]here was no evidence presented at the trial that Billie Mac Jobe had any previous arrests or convictions. I did not relay this information to any of the other jurors on this case, but I was aware after the conversation with David Carnes that Mr.

> Jobe had previously been convicted of the same offense that he was charged with in this case.[14]

(emphasis added).

This court reviews the district court's denial of a motion for new trial for abuse of discretion. United States v. Sanchez-Sotelo, 8 F.3d 202, 212 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1410 (1994). Likewise, "[t]he procedures used to investigate allegations of juror misconduct and the decision as to whether to hold an evidentiary hearing are matters which rest solely within the sound discretion of the district court." United States v. Roberts, 913 F.2d 211, 216 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied sub nom., Preston v. United States, 500 U.S. 955, 111 S. Ct. 2264 (1991).

Recently, this court reiterated the principle that in any trial there is an initial presumption of jury impartiality. United States v. Ruggiero, 56 F.3d 647, 652 (5th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, ___ S. Ct. ___ (1995). This presumption may be defeated, however, through evidence that the extrinsic factual matter actually tainted the jury's deliberations. Id. (citing United States v. O'Keefe, 722 F.2d 1175, 1179 (5th Cir. 1983)). A district court must investigate the asserted impropriety only when a colorable showing of extrinsic influence is made. Id.

[14] In fact, the information that Carnes relayed to Shamaley was technically incorrect. In 1979, Billie Mac had pleaded guilty to one count of mail fraud. At a pretrial hearing, the district court indicated that this prior conviction would be admissible at trial for impeachment purposes only if Billie Mac testified; he did not.

Ruggiero not only examined when a district court must investigate alleged juror misconduct, but also explained

> . . . that a defendant is entitled to a new trial when extrinsic evidence is introduced into the jury room unless there is no reasonable possibility that the jury's verdict was influenced by the material that improperly came before it.

Id. (citations omitted). Hence, when extrinsic evidence is introduced into the jury room, the defendant enjoys a rebuttable presumption of prejudice and "the government has the burden of proving the harmlessness of the breach." Id. (citations omitted). When the district court considers whether the government has carried this burden, it should examine "the content of the extrinsic material, the manner in which it came to the jury's attention, and the weight of the evidence against the defendant." Id. at 652-53 (citations omitted).

In the instant case, the district court investigated the alleged impropriety when it considered Shamaley's affidavit. Through this affidavit and through the evidence at trial, the court was able to conduct the inquiry mandated in Ruggiero. Having done so, the court concluded that there was no reasonable possibility that the extrinsic information had prejudiced the appellants. When discussing Billie Mac, the court reasoned that

> The circumstances fail to indicate that Defendant Billie Mac Jobe was prejudiced by the incident. Juror Shamaley obviously attributed no significance to the incident, because he did not report it to the Court or to any other juror. Furthermore, the record shows that Billie Mac

> Jobe was named as a defendant in six counts that were submitted to the jury for a verdict, and the jury found Jobe not guilty as to four of those counts. . . . Under the facts of this case, the Court is unable to find a reasonable possibility that the extrinsic information communicated to one juror prejudiced the Defendant.

Because the information relayed to Shamaley did not taint his deliberations, the information was not relayed to any other jurors, and the evidence against Billie Mac on the counts of conviction was overwhelming, the district court did not abuse its discretion when it denied the appellants' request for a new trial without first ordering an evidentiary hearing.[15] It is unnecessary to apply the Ruggiero factors separately to each of the other defendants, as there is no likelihood that they were prejudiced in any way by the tainted report of Billie Mac's prior criminal conduct.

[15] Additionally, as Ruggiero explains, a court is limited in its ability to inquire into jury deliberations. Federal Rule of Evidence 606(b) forbids a juror from testifying about deliberations, and this rule also bars juror testimony regarding

> at least four topics: (1) the method or arguments of the jury's deliberations, (2) the effect of any particular thing upon an outcome in the deliberations, (3) the mindset or emotions of any juror during deliberation, and (4) the testifying juror's own mental process during the deliberations.

Ruggiero, 56 F.3d at 652. Given these limitations, an evidentiary hearing would have provided the district court with virtually nothing but what was already contained in the Shamaley affidavit.

B. Jury Instructions

All of the appellants contend that the district court erroneously declined to submit their requested instruction on good faith to the jury. Furthermore, the appellants argue that the instruction given to the jury somehow shifted the burden of proof from the government to the appellants when it failed to inform jurors that the government carried the burden of negating their claims of good faith. The appellants also suggest that the district court erroneously limited their defense of good faith by failing to extend this defense to the false entry offenses.

Billie Mac urges similar error with respect to his requested instructions on willfulness and specific intent. He notes that the district court did not explicitly define either term and suggests that the court's omission seriously impeded his ability to present his defense to the jury.

Recognizing that district courts enjoy substantial latitude in formulating jury instructions, this court reviews the refusal to provide a requested jury instruction for abuse of discretion. United States v. Smithson, 49 F.3d 138, 142 (5th Cir. 1995). The district court will not abuse its discretion when it denies a proffered instruction unless this instruction "(1) was a correct statement of the law, (2) was not substantially covered in the charge as a whole, and (3) concerned an important point in the trial such that the failure to instruct the jury on the issue seriously impaired the defendant's ability to present a given defense." Id.

In this case, the district court did instruct the jurors on good faith. The instruction explained that

> [i]n determining whether or not any defendant acted with criminal intent to defraud or deceive, you may consider whether or not that defendant had a good faith belief that what he was doing was legal. If you have a reasonable doubt as to whether or not a defendant had a good faith belief that was [sic] he was doing was legal, you must acquit that defendant or defendants and say by your verdict 'not guilty.'

The appellants' challenges to this instruction are meritless. This instruction in no way reduces the government's burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt or thrusts a burden on the appellants. Moreover, the court did not limit its good faith instruction to certain appellants or defenses; rather, the instruction provides that the good faith of any appellant may be considered when adjudicating his criminal intent on any charged offense.

Although Billie Mac contends that the district court erred when it refused separately to define either willfulness[16] or specific intent, the court clearly defined "knowingly." Indeed, its definition of this term came from this circuit's pattern jury instructions and provided that "[t]he word 'knowingly' as that term is used in these instructions, means that the act was done voluntarily and intentionally and not because of mistake or accident." Though the district court did not explicitly define specific intent,

[16] In its conspiracy instructions, the court instructed the jury that they must conclude beyond reasonable doubt "[t]hat the defendant knew the unlawful purpose of the agreement and joined in it willfully, that is with the intent to further the unlawful purpose." Hence, while the instructions may have not separately defined willfulness, when read as a whole, they did include such a definition.

it correctly charged the jurors on the element of intent in each offense. Both of Billie Mac's proposed instructions on specific intent merely reiterate that the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt "that the defendants knowingly did an act which the law forbids. . . . " (emphasis added). The effect of the proposed instructions is redundant, and they were unnecessary.

In sum, the court's instructions accurately reflected the law and substantially covered the appellants' proffered instructions without impairing the ability of any of the appellants to advance a defense.

C. Joint Motion for Severance

Stanley, Taylor, Sutton, and Novoa contend that the district court abused its discretion when it denied their joint motion for severance. The joint motion was premised on the belief that at a separate trial, Billie Mac would provide exculpatory testimony for the appellants. To support this belief, the appellants submitted in camera Billie Mac's affidavit, which stated that he would testify at a separate trial in which he was not a co-defendant. The affidavit also asserted that Billie Mac would testify that, to his knowledge, none of the other appellants had committed any of the charged offenses.

The district court denied the joint motion for severance after conducting a hearing. The court reasoned that Billie Mac's affidavit "falls far short of demonstrating a basis for severance". As the court put it, Billie Mac insisted in his affidavit > that he acted in good faith in connection with all the financial transactions involved in the indictment, and that he committed no offense. The remainder of his affidavit consists of conclusory statements that his co-Defendants did not conspire with him to commit any offense and that they are innocent of any wrongdoing . . . If he gave the testimony at a severed trial, it would have little evidentiary value.

To allege a prima facie case for severance based on the exculpatory testimony of a co-defendant, a defendant must first show, among other things, that the testimony is truly exculpatory in nature and effect. United States v. Rocha, 916 F.2d 219, 232 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 934, 111 S. Ct. 2057 (1991) (laying out detailed criteria for severance based on 26 codefendant testimony). Billie Mac's affidavit did not fulfill that standard.

The appellants rely on this court's decision in United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1165 (1995), to support their claim that severance was improperly denied. In Neal, this court held that the district court erred when it denied severance in a drug conspiracy case in which the "undisputed leader of the conspiracy" gave extensive, specific, and exculpatory testimony both by affidavit and in camera and would have so testified in a separate trial on behalf of the co-defendants. Id. at 1047 & 1047 n.21. Recognizing that "a defendant might suffer prejudice [from a joint trial] if essential exculpatory evidence that would be available to a defendant tried alone were unavailable in a joint trial," we vacated the convictions of the co-defendants and remanded for a new trial. Id. at 1047 (citing Zafiro v.

United States, 506 U.S. 534, 113 S. Ct. 933 (1993)) (emphasis added).

The appellants' reliance on Neal is misplaced. In Neal, the district court was presented with far more than the conclusory, non-incriminating affidavit offered by Billie Mac; in that case, the defendant gave extensive, specific, and detailed exculpatory testimony. The Neal co-defendants suffered specific and compelling prejudice because their trial had not been severed and the testimony never heard. Here, the appellants did not suffer prejudice since the affidavit did not contain any specific exculpatory testimony. See United States v. Dillman, 15 F.3d 384 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 3010 (1992) (no abuse of discretion in denying severance because of the lack of candor reflected in Dillman's affidavit on behalf of his co-defendants and because the "affidavit was in no sense self-incriminatory; it was in fact self-serving. . . . ").

Billie Mac's self-serving, non-incriminating affidavit offered no evidence that would exculpate the other defendants and, like that in Dillman, did not justify severance. The district court did not abuse its discretion when it denied this motion.

D. Gaudin Error

All of the appellants urge that the Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Gaudin, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 2310 (1995), requires reversal of their convictions. In Gaudin, the Supreme Court held that where materiality is an element of the charged offense, in that case 18 U.S.C. § 1001, the trial court's failure to submit the question of materiality to the jury violates the defendant's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights. Id. at 2320.

In the present case, the district court instructed the jury on Counts 3, 5, 7, and 10, but not on Count 1 or 2, that they "need not consider whether the false statement was a material false statement, even though that language is used in the indictment. This is not a question for the jury to decide." The appellants contend that materiality was an element in each of these counts of conviction and that their constitutional rights were violated when the district court failed to tender to the jury the question of materiality.

The effect of Gaudin error, if any, on the multiple verdicts against these defendants is difficult to unravel. Further, the implications of Gaudin are subject to dispute. Where materiality is an element of the charged crimes, including § 1344 bank fraud and § 1014 making false statements to a federally insured institution, Gaudin may cast doubt on the convictions.

There is a threshold issue, however, whether materiality is an element of the offenses of conspiring to commit bank fraud and aiding and abetting bank fraud.[17]

[17] Defendants asserted without dispute by the government in this case that materiality is also an element of the crime of making false entries in bank records with intent to injure or defraud the bank. 18 U.S.C. § 1005. Specifically, Stanley Jobe and Sutton make this point as a vehicle for a Gaudin challenge with respect to Counts 4 and 6, which alleged § 1005 violations. There is support in other circuits for this proposition. See United States v. Rapp, 871 F.2d 957, 963-64 (11th Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Bazarian v. United States, 493 U.S. 890, 110 S.Ct. 233 (1989). In this

With but little assistance from counsel, the court has uncovered no cases that expressly decide that a conspiracy offense, the gravamen of which is the agreement to commit a crime, must incorporate as to all conspirators the elements underlying each substantive offense committed or attempted pursuant to the conspiracy. We will assume arguendo that such a predicate is required. The consequence of this assumption is that appellants' Count 1 conspiracy convictions required materiality findings insofar as they rested on substantive § 1014 false statement and § 1344 bank fraud offenses, which have up to now clearly incorporated a materiality element.[18] Likewise, despite counsel's fluctuations on this important question, aiding and abetting crimes like those charged in Count 2 require a finding of the elements of the underlying offense.[19] As appellants Sutton, Taylor, Stanley and circuit, however, materiality is not identified as an element of the offense except for the statement that a material omission of information as well as an actual misstatement qualifies as a false entry. United States v. Jackson, 621 U.S. 216, 219 (5th Cir. 1980). For purposes of discussion, we will assume without deciding that materiality is an element of § 1005.

[18] But see, United States v. Wells, 63 F.3d 745 (8th Cir. 1995), cert. granted, 116 S.Ct. 1540 (1996).

[19] Under the aiding and abetting statute, 18 U.S.C. § 2, the government, in addition to proving that the elements of the substantive offense occurred, must also prove [the element of aiding and abetting]. United States v. Hall, 845 F.2d 1281, 1285 (5th Cir. 1988), cert. denied sub nom. Hall v. United States, 488 U.S. 860 citing United States v. Smith, 631 F.2d 391, 395 (5th Cir. 1980). See also United States v. Pedroza, 78 F.3d 179, 183 (5th Cir. 1996); United States v. Beuttenmuller, 29 F.3d 973, 982 (5th Cir. 1996); United States v. Fischel, 686 F.2d 1082, 1987-89 (5th Cir. 1982); United States v. Longoria, 569 F.2d 422, 425 (5th Cir. 1978).

Novoa were all charged in Count 2 with aiding and abetting Billie Mac's § 1344 bank fraud scheme, it was incumbent on the government to prove that they shared in furthering Billie Mac's material misrepresentations to the banks. In sum, actual or potential materiality elements were present in a number of the charged offenses.

Because, however, appellants did not object to the court's charge at trial, and did not at any point during trial argue that the element of materiality in any of these offenses must be submitted to the jury, our appellate review is confined to plain error analysis. Indeed, nearly every court of appeals that has considered the standard of review of unobjected – go Gaudin error has similarly adopted a plain error analysis. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 52(b). See also United States v. Baumgardner, 85 F.3d 1305, 1308-09 (8th Cir. 1996); United States v. David, 83 F.3d 638, 645 (4th Cir. 1996); United States v. Randazzo, 80 F.3d 623, 631 (1st Cir. 1996) (assuming the issue arguendo); petition for cert. filed (Aug. 20, 1996) (No. 96-294); and United States v. Keys, ___ F.3d ___, 1996 WL 512389 (9th Cir. 1996) (en banc) Defendant receives benefit of Gaudin "without being held to plain error standards"). This court had issued an inconclusive ruling on the subject in United States v. McGuire, 79 F.3d 1396 (5th Cir. 1996), but that opinion was vacated and recently reheard by the en banc court and is not controlling. Nor does our opinion in United States v. Pettigrew, 77 F.3d 1500, 1510-11 (5th Cir. 1996), establish Gaudin error as per se reversible. In Pettigrew, the United States conceded "that the district court erred in refusing to submit appellants' requested materiality instruction with respect to the section 1006 counts." 77 F.3d at 1510. Thus, the Pettigrew court's analysis considers only whether such an error can be harmless, the term which applies to appellate review of error that has been preserved by objection at trial. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 52(a). Pettigrew is distinguishable on its facts.

According to the plain error standard, as articulated by the Supreme Court, this court may only reverse appellants' convictions if (1) there was an error, (2) the error was clear and obvious, and (3) the error affected a defendant's substantial rights. United States v. Olano, 507 U.S. 725, 730-31, 113 S. Ct. 1770, 1775-76 (1993). An argument has been made, though not by these defendants, that error can only be "plain" if the action of the trial court was known to be erroneous at the time of trial, hence, defendants may not take advantage of changes that occur in the law after they are tried as a basis for arguing "plain error." See, e.g., McGuire, 79 F.3d at 1413 (Smith, J. concurring and dissenting). Our en banc court arguably suggested as much in United States v. Calverley, 37 F.3d 160, 162-63 (5th Cir. 1994) (en banc), cert. denied ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1266. In Calverley, however, the error was at least arguable at the time of trial. Id. at 165. Here, there was no basis under the law at the time of trial to raise a Gaudin objection. See United States v. Gaudin, 28 F.3d 943, 955 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc) (Kozinski, J. dissenting) (all circuits but the Ninth had held that materiality in § 1001 was a matter of law for the court), aff'd, ___ U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 2310 (1995). As the Fourth Circuit concluded:

> [a]llowing Rule 52(b) [plain error] review where an objection would have been baseless in light of then-existing caselaw, unlike allowing review where the error was merely "unclear" at the time of trial, furthers the substantial interest in > the orderly administration of justice that underlies the contemporaneous objection rule.

David, 83 F.3d at 644. Allowing plain error review when an objection would have been baseless under then-current law does not countenance the sandbagging that the contemporaneous objection rule is designed to prevent, while denying plain error review in that situation would encourage frivolous objections by defense attorneys trying to preserve error based on every conceivable future change in the law. Id. at 645. In the interest of maintaining uniformity with the other circuits, we now adopt their formulation that permits defendants to assert plain error based on intervening changes in the law.[20]

Application of the Olano plain error standard does not, however, necessarily require reversal of these convictions. The third prong of the Olano test requires that the error must have affected the substantial rights of the appellants. And even if that is so, the Supreme Court explained that an appellate court need not exercise discretion to correct the error unless it seriously affects the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings. Olano, 507 U.S. at 734-36, 113 S. Ct. at 1778.

Reviewing all of the above-listed counts of conviction in light of these standards, we conclude that although plain error was committed with respect to the defective jury instructions, and assuming without deciding that the errors affected appellants' substantial rights, it is not necessary to overturn the convictions. Substantial government resources have been expended on these cases to date. The appellants succeeded in defending themselves against some counts (e.g. money laundering), while on those before us, the incriminating evidence, although often circumstantial, is overwhelming. The materiality of the false entries, false representations, and amounts of money involved in the expanded check kiting scheme were never seriously contested by the defendants at trial. The paucity of record references to materiality is telling. On this record, there is simply no reasonable likelihood that the appellants were prejudiced by the failure to instruct on materiality. We do not feel compelled to order a new trial in the exercise of our considered discretion under Olano.

E. Joint Sufficiency of Evidence Challenges – Count 1 and Count 2

Having declined to exercise our discretion to correct any alleged Gaudin error in Count 1, the only remaining challenge to the convictions for conspiracy to commit bank fraud suggests that the evidence against Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe is insufficient to support these convictions. In order to establish a conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. § 371, the government must prove beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of an agreement between two or more people to violate a law of the United States and that any one of the conspirators committed an overt act in furtherance of that agreement. See, e.g., United States v. Faulkner, 17 F.3d 745, 768 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, ___

U.S. ___, 115 S. Ct. 193 (1994); United States v. Chaney, 964 F.2d 437, 449 (5th Cir. 1992). The government must also prove that the defendant knew of the conspiracy and voluntarily participated in it. Chaney, 964 F.2d at 449.

Given the extensive evidence in this case, the challenges raised by Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting their convictions is thoroughly meritless. The standard which guides this court's review is whether, viewing the evidence and all reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the government, a "reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence established guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." United States v. Mergerson, 4 F.3d 337, 341 (5th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S. Ct. 1310 (1994). We have above described the extensive evidence supporting the convictions of Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe. From all of the evidence and testimony presented to the jury in this case, a rational trier of fact could easily have decided that Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe conspired to commit bank fraud with Billie Mac. Put differently, a rational jury could have concluded that Novoa, Taylor, and Stanley Jobe were knowing, voluntary participants in an agreement to commit bank fraud and that overt acts were committed in furtherance of that agreement; their convictions under Count 1 are affirmed.[21]

[21] Novoa asserts particularly that, pursuant to Ingram v. United States, 360 U.S. 672 (1959), the government did not prove that he shared Billie Mac's intent to defraud the bank, a requirement of his conspiracy and aiding and abetting convictions. We disagree. Novoa was in charge of the wire room and accounting for EPSB. His underlings figured out that Billie

To aid and abet an offense, as charged in Count 2, the appellants must share in the criminal intent of the principal and assist the principal's perpetration of a crime. Sutton, Taylor, Novoa and Stanley argue that the government did not prove "beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant[s] willingly associated [themselves] with a criminal venture and participated therein as something [they] wanted to bring about." United States v. Cloud, 872 F.2d 846, at 850 (9th Cir. 1989). From all of the evidence and testimony presented to the jury in this case, however, a rational trier of fact could have decided that the appellants aided and abetted Billie Mac's bank fraud. Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2789 (1979). The jury could have rationally concluded that these appellants had an intent to defraud the banks by facilitating Billie Mac's bank fraud. In United States v. Knipp, 963 F.2d 839, 846 (6th Cir. 1992), the Sixth Circuit affirmed the defendant's aiding and abetting bank fraud conviction where the defendant "allowed . . . [the] overdrafts to continue and that he facilitated the kite to cover them because the overdrafts amounted to huge, unauthorized loans beyond the single customer legal lending limits. . . . " The evidence in the instant case demonstrates that the remaining appellants facilitated Billie Mac's kite in similar and, indeed, more extensive ways. See also, United States v. Sims, 895 F.2d 326 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding that the defendant acted with the intent to defraud was sufficient to sustain his conviction for aiding and abetting attempts to commit a wire fraud against a bank). Accordingly, the Count 2 convictions must be affirmed against these appellants.

F. Making False Bank Entries: Count 16

Taylor was convicted of making materially false bank entries in the records of El Paso State Bank under Count 16. Specifically, Count 16 alleged that on December 29, 1989, Taylor signed and issued a cashier's check for over $3,500,000 to Billie Mac Jobe, yet failed to disclose and detail this transaction in EPSB records until several days later on January 4, 1990. After examining the record and evidence in the light most favorable to the government, we conclude that the evidence supports Taylor's conviction. His argument to the contrary is meritless.

G. Making False Statements on a Loan Application and Aiding and Abetting the Same Offense: Counts 5 and 6

Stanley Jobe was convicted under Counts 5 and 6 of making false statements on a loan application, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014, and of aiding and abetting Philip Sutton to make false statements on the same application. Stanley argues insufficient evidence. In these instances, we agree with the contention. To prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014, the government must demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that "(1) the defendant made a false statement to a financial institution; (2) the defendant made the false statement knowingly; (3) he did so for the purpose of influencing the financial institution's action; and (4) the statement was false as to a material fact."

United States v. Thompson, 811 F.2d 841, 844 (5th Cir. 1987). Stanley is also charged in Count 6 with aiding and abetting Philip Sutton to make false entries in the bank records concerning the same application, which was made, as the indictment charges, "by Stanley Pruet Jobe." After reviewing the evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom in the light most favorable to the government, this court concludes that the government has failed to prove that Stanley Jobe made a false statement to a financial institution or that he made a loan application concerning the Deer Creek Spice loan. As a result, Stanley Jobe's convictions are not supported by sufficient evidence.

Under Counts 5 and 6, the government's theory of false statement and aiding and abetting is that Stanley Jobe misrepresented that the purpose of the Deer Creek Spice loan was to finance the acquisition of inventory. The government further suggests that this intentional misrepresentation was entered on a "loan application" made by Stanley Jobe at CNB, dated May 18, 1990. CNB was allegedly influenced by the false statement because this statement was relied upon by bank officers in the bank's loan approval committee. Under the government's theory and indictment of Counts 5 and 6, because Stanley Jobe knowingly misrepresented the purpose of the loan and also aided and abetted Philip Sutton in making material false bank entries at CNB, he is guilty. The record does not, however, support the government's assertion that Stanley Jobe made a false statement on a loan application at CNB or communicated with Philip Sutton in any way to assist Sutton in making false bank records concerning the loan. It is undisputed that Stanley made no direct representations concerning the loan.[22] He was neither the borrower nor the payee of the proceeds, although he was a guarantor. Moreover, Stanley Jobe did not sign any loan application at CNB on May 18, 1990;[23] in fact, there was no formal loan application whatsoever, but rather a loan presentation form that was compiled by CNB employees and used by Sutton but unsigned by Stanley. At no time during trial did the government introduce into evidence a loan application on which Stanley Jobe made a false statement. Because the government's evidence at trial was insufficient to allow a reasonable juror to conclude that Stanley made false statements on a loan application or aided and abetted Sutton, his Counts 5 and 6 convictions are reversed.

II. Appellants' Individual Challenges to their Convictions

A. Stanley's Challenges to the Sentence Enhancements

The district court imposed two different sentence enhancements on Stanley. The first of these is a two-level enhancement imposed under U.S.S.G. § 3B1.1(c) for Stanley's supposed efforts as a manager or supervisor of criminal activity.

[23] The promissory note was actually signed by Frank Owen.

Stanley argues that the district court clearly erred when it imposed this enhancement on him because there was no evidence to support the requisite finding under § 3B1.1(c) that he managed or supervised criminal activity. Moreover, the Presentence Report ("PSR"), on which the district court relied, incorrectly concludes that his position as a director of two of the banks involved in the kiting scheme demonstrates that he managed or supervised the criminal activity.

As this court has frequently explained, the decision to enhance a sentencing guideline will be upheld if it "results from a legally correct application of the Guidelines to factual findings that are not clearly erroneous." United States v. Sherrod, 964 F.2d 1501, 1506 (5th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, sub. nom, Cooper v. United States, ___ U.S. ___, 113 S. Ct. 832 (1992). Also, a PSR "generally bears sufficient indicia of reliability to be considered as evidence by the trial judge in making the factual determinations required by the guidelines." United States v. Elwood, 999 F.2d 814, 817 (5th Cir. 1993).

Nevertheless, a thorough review of the record lends no support to the district court's finding that Stanley somehow managed or supervised the criminal activity. According to United States v. Ronning, 47 F.3d 710, 711-12 (5th Cir. 1995), § 3B1.1(c) requires that a defendant be the organizer of [sic] leader of at least one other participant in the crime and that he assert control or influence over at least that one participant.[24] There is no evidence that Stanley

[24] This is the requirement under § 3B1.1(c) for enhancing Stanley's sentence. As will be discussed later, however, this managed or supervised any of his codefendants or any other people in connection with the illegal acts. Absent such evidence, this court must vacate his sentencing enhancement under § 3B1.1(c).

The second sentence enhancement imposed on Stanley is not as problematic. Under that enhancement, the district court increased Stanley's offense level two levels because it found that he had "abused a position of public or private trust, or used a special skill, in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense. . . . " § 3B1.3. This provision > encompasses two factors: (1) whether the defendant occupies a position of trust and (2) whether the defendant abused her position in a manner that significantly facilitated the commission or concealment of the offense. To determine whether the position of trust "significantly facilitated" the commission of the offense, the court must decide whether the defendant occupied a superior position, relative to all people in a position to commit the offense, as a result of her job.

United States v. Fisher, 7 F.3d 69, 70-71 (5th Cir. 1993).

Stanley raises a litany of challenges to this enhancement. For instance, he contends that his ordinary, commercial relationships with the lenders were not trust relationships; that, although he did have a position of trust with two of the banks involved, he did not use this enhancement is also applicable if the defendant exercised "management responsibility over the property, assets, or activities of a criminal organization." See USSG § 3B1.1(c), comment., n.2.

position to further his father's activities; that his acquisition of a loan was not an abuse of trust; that the Deer Creek Spice loan was from CNB where he occupied no position of trust; and that mere knowledge of his father's activities did not constitute an abuse of trust. While the record is admittedly close on this issue, Stanley's PSR found that Stanley was present at an EPSB meeting with bank examiners in early 1991 and was advised at this meeting of his father's check kiting scheme. Also, he was apprised of Billie Mac's overdrafts that had been covered by wire transfers on the Jobe Concrete Products account at FNPB. As discussed earlier, Stanley was on the board of directors at both EPSB and FNPB. Hence, there is some evidence to support the district court's finding that Stanley occupied positions of trust at both banks and used these positions to facilitate or conceal his father's check kiting scheme. Given this evidence, sentence enhancement under § 3B1.3 for abuse of trust was not clearly erroneous.

B. Novoa's Separate Challenges

1. Bruton Claims

Novoa contends that the district court improperly denied his motion to sever, violating his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation as this right was explained by the Supreme Court in Bruton v. United States, 391 U.S. 123, 88 S. Ct. 1620 (1968). This court has interpreted Bruton to provide that a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation is violated when "(1) several co-defendants are tried jointly, (2) one defendant's extrajudicial statement is used to implicate another defendant in the crime, and (3) the confessor does not take the stand and is thus not subject to cross-examination." United States v. Restrepo, 994 F.2d 173, 186 (5th Cir. 1993). Bruton can be violated when a co-defendant's statement "directly alludes to the complaining defendant." United States v. Beaumont, 972 F.2d 91, 95 (5th Cir. 1992) (quoting United States v. Webster, 734 F.2d 1048, 1054 n.6 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, sub. nom, Hoskins v. United States, 469 U.S. 1073, 105 S. Ct. 565 (1984)). However, severance is proper only in cases where a "defendant's statement directly incriminates his or her co-defendants without reference to other, admissible evidence." Id. (emphasis added).

Novoa argues that the admission of certain statements by Taylor, through bank examiner Burress, and statements by Billie Mac, through Hale, the credit manager and vice-president of Jobe Concrete Products, violated his Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses.[25] Neither Taylor nor Billie Mac testified at trial.

The first statement to which Novoa objects under Bruton was a statement by Taylor made through bank examiner Burress. At trial, Burress testified as follows:

> Mr. Taylor indicated that on December 29th, the date that check was issued, the cashier, Fernando Novoa, presented him with a check. . . .
>
> That Fernando Novoa presented the check for him to sign. Mr. Taylor signed the check without verifying that there [sic] collected funds in the account sufficient to pay for the check. His

---

> stated reason was that he had faith in the cashier that that was okay. . . .
>
> Next, he indicated he asked – When he was told that the transaction was illegal, he asked cashier Fernando . . . Novoa what happened, what was the reason for this, and he did not get an answer. . . .
> Stephen Taylor indicated that he felt like Fernando Novoa had some checks in his drawer that were written by Billie Mac Jobe until January 4th, the date that the cashier's check was paid for.[26]

Prior to this testimony, Novoa's counsel objected that the testimony was not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule under Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).[27] The trial judge then asked Novoa's counsel whether he was asking that the statement not be considered against his client, and Novoa's counsel responded, "Absolutely." The district court then issued a limiting instruction to the jury that it must consider this testimony only as to Taylor.

Novoa correctly contends that the district court's limiting instruction in this case was powerless to rectify an actual Bruton error. Cruz v. New York, 481 U.S. 186, 190, 107 S. Ct. 1714, 1717-18 (1987). Hence, if the admission of Taylor's statements through Burress violated Bruton, the district court's limiting instruction was ineffective.

[26] As was noted earlier, Taylor retracted this allegation in a subsequent conversation with Burress.

[27] Novoa had, of course, also moved for severance prior to trial.

But Taylor's statements did not violate Novoa's Sixth Amendment right to confront witnesses as this right was explained in Bruton. The statements did not directly incriminate Novoa without reference to other admissible evidence. See Beaumont, 972 F.2d at 95. The only potentially incriminating statement by Taylor suggested that Novoa kept Billie Mac's checks in his drawer until the date on which the cashier's check was paid.[28] At best, this statement was a tentative opinion by Taylor, one that he later retracted; Burress' testimony included Taylor's retraction of his statement. Taken as a whole, none of Taylor's statements through Burress directly incriminated Novoa, so these statements did not run afoul of Bruton.

Furthermore, because the statements did not directly incriminate Novoa without reference to other admissible evidence, the court's limiting instruction is adequate to protect Novoa from any potential prejudice. As this court recently explained in United States v. Leal, ___ F.3d ___, 1996 WL 30673, *5 (5th Cir. 1996),

[28] Although Novoa suggests that Taylor's statements also accuse Novoa of having dishonestly orchestrated an 'illegal' insufficient cashier's check transaction for Jobe, there is no support for this in the record. At most, Taylor suggests that Novoa could not explain why the cashier's check was not posted on bank records for several days. This in no way directly incriminates Novoa.

> clearly implicate the codefendant. United States v. Kelly, 973 F.2d 1145 (5th Cir. 1992). Furthermore, even if a Bruton violation occurs, 'the error may be harmless if the statement's impact is insignificant in light of the weight of other evidence against the defendant.'

(citation omitted) (emphasis added). In Leal, as in the instant case, the proffered statements did not clearly implicate the codefendant and since "[t]here was no direct implication . . . the limiting instruction was adequate to prevent prejudice." Id. Given both the nature of the proffered statements and the court's limiting instruction, this court concluded in Leal as we do now, that "[t]he district court acted well within its discretion in denying the motion to sever trials." Id.

The second statement to which Novoa objects was a statement by Billie Mac through Hale. At trial, Hale testified as follows:

> I'm uncertain as to the time, but I did have a conversation with Mr. Jobe about deposit slips at El Paso State Bank. . . .
>
> He told me that he was receiving immediate credit via deposit slips that have been encoded to provide that. . . .
>
> [By "encoded"] I believe he was referring to the micro encoding at the bottom of the deposit slips. . . .
>
> Fernando Novoa [was the person at El Paso State Bank who 'had worked it' so that he could receive immediate credit with the encoding]. . . .

Careful review of the record demonstrates that Novoa did not object to this testimony.[29]

Although this testimony is admittedly incriminating to Novoa and might raise Bruton concerns, as has been previously explained, because Novoa failed to object to this testimony, this court will review for plain error. After carefully considering the underlying record, this court declines to exercise its discretion to correct whatever Bruton error this testimony might contain. Even if this court were to grant Novoa's objection to the statements of Billie Mac through Hale and strike these statements from the record, the evidence is nonetheless more than sufficient to affirm Novoa's conviction sentences under Counts 1 and 2 for aiding and abetting bank fraud. Given the other, admissible evidence against Novoa, any Bruton error would be harmless, so this court's refusal to rectify it through plain error review does not cause a miscarriage of justice. See, e.g., U.S. v. Kelly, 973 F.2d 1145 (5th Cir. 1992) (applying harmless error analysis to an alleged Bruton error); U.S. v. Cartwright, 6 F.3d 294, 300 (5th Cir. 1993) (holding that no plain Bruton error occurred when the evidence of guilt was overwhelming).

[29] Earlier in the testimony, Novoa had objected that the government's question inquiring about a period of time, "[b]efore Fernando Novoa came to work for Mr. Billie Mac Jobe and his entities," assumed facts not yet in evidence, but this objection did not relate to the testimony about which Novoa alleges Bruton error; no objection was raised to that testimony.

2. Sentence Enhancements

Novoa contends that the district court erred in applying a two level enhancement under § 3B1.1(c) discussed above because he did not manage or supervise any other criminal participant in the check-kiting scheme. He also argues that the district court was clearly erroneous when it refused to grant him a reduction in sentence under § 3B1.2 for his status as a minimal or minor participant in the check kite. On the first point, Novoa is correct.

To support his argument that the § 3B1.1(c) enhancement was erroneous, Novoa relies on the language in the commentary accompanying that section that indicates that he must supervise, manage, or control another co-defendant in order to qualify for the enhancement. However, as this court explicitly recognized in Ronning, "[t]he note recognizes an exception to the control requirement if a defendant exercises management responsibility over a criminal organization's property, assets, or activities." Ronning, 47 F.3d at 711. Indeed, the note expressly provides that

> [a]n upward departure may be warranted, however, in the case of a defendant who did not organize, lead, manage, or supervise another participant, but who nevertheless exercised management responsibility over the property, assets, or activities of a criminal organization.

USSG § 3B1.1(c), comment., n.2.

As the district court did not order an upward departure, this ground of enhancement is unavailable to sustain the enhancement on appeal. Further, the record contains no evidence, required by Ronning, that Novoa managed or supervised any of his codefendants in connection with the illegal check kite. We must vacate this adjustment and remand for resentencing.[30]

Novoa also claims that the district court was clearly erroneous when it failed to grant him a sentence reduction under § 3B1.2. This section provides that

> [b]ased on the defendant's role in the offense, decrease the offense level as follows: (a) If the defendant was a minimal participant in any criminal activity, decrease by 4 levels; (b) If the defendant was a minor participant in any criminal activity, decrease by 2 levels. In cases falling between (a) and (b), decrease by 3 levels.

USSG § 3B1.2. On appeal, Novoa claims that he was entitled to a two-level downward adjustment as a "minor participant." The government counters that Novoa has waived this claim since he argued at sentencing for a four-level downward adjustment for his role as a "minimal participant."

The record supports the government's claim that Novoa sought the four-level downward adjustment at sentencing rather than the two-level reduction given to a "minor participant." While this court could conclude that Novoa has waived his claim for treatment as a "minor participant," the district court's denial of this two-level reduction was nonetheless proper because there was ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion

[30] This decision is without prejudice to the possibility that an upward departure for Novoa's "management responsibility" over the assets involved in check kiting might be warranted.

that Novoa was more than a minor participant in Billie Mac's check kiting scheme.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this court AFFIRMS all but two of the convictions of all the appellants, VACATES only Stanley's convictions on Count 5 and Count 6, VACATES Stanley's and Novoa's managerial or supervisory sentencing enhancements, and REMANDS Stanley and Novoa for resentencing. All other points raised on petitions for rehearing are DENIED.

This fine shall be paid in full immediately.

If the fine is not paid, the court may sentence the defendant to any sentence which might have been originally imposed. See 18 U.S.C. § 3614.

STATEMENT OF REASONS

The court adopts the factual findings and guideline application in the presentence report except the Court found that the 11 level increase based on the amount of loss is disallowed and the 3 level increase for role in the offense should only be a 2 level increase.

Guideline Range Determined by the Court:

Total Offense Level:	12
Criminal History Category:	I
Imprisonment Range:	10 months to 16 months
Supervised Release Range:	2 to 3 years as to count 1 3 to 5 years as to counts 2, 5 and 6
Fine Range:	$3,000.00 to $30,000.00
Restitution:	$

The sentence is within the guideline range, that range does not exceed 24 months, and the court finds no reason to depart from the sentence called for by application of the guidelines.

v.	§
BILLIE MAC JOBE, STANLEY PRUET JOBE, PHILIP MARK SUTTON, STEPHEN TAYLOR and FERNANDO NOVOA	§

ORDER REGARDING DEFENDANT STANLEY PRUET JOBE'S MOTION FOR ACQUITTAL AND MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL

(Filed Aug. 29, 1994)

Defendant Stanley Pruet Jobe was charged in a multiple count indictment with the offenses of bank fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1344); conspiracy (18 U.S.C. § 371); submitting false statements to financial institutions in connection with loan applications (18 U.S.C. § 1014); aiding and abetting bank employees to make false entries in the books and records of the bank (18 U.S.C. §§ 1005 and 2), and laundering monetary instruments (18 U.S.C. § 1956(a)(1)). After a jury trial, Stanley Jobe was convicted of bank fraud, conspiracy, making a false statement in a loan application, and aiding and abetting the making of false entries in bank records. He was also acquitted with respect to some charges in the indictment. He has filed a post-trial motion under Rule 29(c), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, renewing the motion for a judgment of acquittal made at the time of trial. He has also filed a motion for a new trial pursuant to Rule 33, Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Stanley Pruet Jobe was found guilty of the offenses of bank fraud and conspiracy to commit bank fraud as alleged in Counts One and Two of the indictment. He contends that the evidence was insufficient to support his conviction on these two counts. The evidence presented in the trial of this case tended to show that Jobe's father and co-Defendant Billie Mac Jobe devised an elaborate scheme for kiting checks among various banks for the purpose of artificially inflating his bank balances and allowing him to use funds which he did not have. The evidence as to the check kite scheme and Billie Mac Jobe's involvement in it was overwhelming. The evidence regarding Stanley Jobe's involvement in the bank fraud conspiracy was less substantial, but the Court finds that it was sufficient. The trial evidence tends to show that the primary active role played by Stanley Jobe in the check kite conspiracy was to obtain bank loans under various representations and pretenses and inject the loan proceeds into the Jobe bank accounts for the purpose of perpetuating the check kite scheme. Stanley Jobe's personal checking accounts were used in connection with the scheme only to a limited extent. However, he was an active participant along with his father in several of the business entities (e.g. Jobe Concrete Products, Jobe Bar Track Ranch, and Cal-Tex Spice Company) the bank accounts of which were used in connection with the check kiting scheme. Stanley Jobe was also a member of the board of directors of one of the banks involved, and the evidence shows that the board of directors was specifically informed of the Jobe check kiting activities by a bank examiner at a meeting at which Stanley Jobe was present. In short, the evidence is sufficient to show Stanley Jobe's knowledge of and intentional participation in the conspiracy. It is, of course, settled law that a conspirator is responsible for offenses committed by his fellow conspirators in furtherance of, or as a foreseeable consequence of, the conspiracy. Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, 647-48 (1946).

Stanley Pruet Jobe was also found guilty of the offenses alleged in Counts Five and Six of the indictment. Both these counts relate to a loan obtained from the Continental National Bank in the name of Deer Creek Spice company. The loan was personally guaranteed by Stanley Jobe, and its stated purpose was for the acquisition of spice inventory. The Government offered convincing evidence that the proceeds of the loan (approximately $734,000.00) were not used to purchase spice inventory, and were never intended for such, but rather were deposited in the Jobe Bar Track Ranch account at the Continental National Bank to cover a Billie Mac Jobe overdraft. The evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Stanley Jobe had falsely represented the purpose of the loan in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1014 and had aided and abetted a bank officer, Philip Sutton, to make false entries to that effect in the records of the bank. The motion for acquittal as to Counts Five and Six should be denied.

In his motion for a new trial, Stanley Jobe contends that the Government concealed material evidence which was favorable to his defense in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963). The exculpatory evidence cited by the Defendant is the grand jury testimony of Special Agent Murphy in November, 1993, concerning check kiting activity in the Jobe bank accounts at the Texas Commerce Bank. A defendant is not entitled to a new trial on the basis of a Brady violation unless he can show a reasonable probability that the outcome would have been different had such evidence been disclosed to him. United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667 (1985). In the instant case, there is no such reasonable probability, because the evidence in question is not exculpatory, but incriminating. The testimony of Special Agent Murphy indicates the existence of an extensive check kiting operation involving the Texas Commerce Bank as well as the El Paso State Bank and Continental National Bank. The Defendant's suggestion that officers of the Texas Commerce Bank were aware of or approved of the Jobe check kiting operation does not constitute a defense to a charge of bank fraud. On the contrary, several bank officials were convicted in the instant case of conspiring with the Jobes to facilitate their check kiting activities.

Stanley Jobe also contends that the Court erred in giving the jury a modified Allen charge. See: Allen v. United States, 164 U.S. 492 (1896). A trial court has broad discretion in deciding whether or not to use an Allen charge. United States v. Gordon, 780 F.2d 1165, 1177 (5th Cir. 1986); United States v. Nichols, 750 F.2d 1260, 1266 (5th Cir. 1985). A judge may encourage jurors who are having difficulty reaching a verdict to deliberate longer, and to give due consideration and respect to the views of their peers. United States v. Straach, 987 F.2d 232, 242 (5th Cir. 1993). The Allen charge given to the jury in the instant case after the jury announced that it could not arrive at a verdict as to certain counts is the one previously approved on many occasions by the Fifth Circuit.

United States v. Gordon, supra.[1] The giving of the Allen charge in the instant case was well within the Court's discretion, and the Defendant's motion for a new trial in this respect is without merit.

Stanley Jobe next contends that he is entitled to a new trial because the Court erred in failing to give the jury additional or supplemental instructions regarding intent, willfulness, and good faith. The Court finds that the instructions actually given to the jury were both complete and correct, and that no error is shown which would entitle the Defendant to a new trial.

Stanley Jobe next contends that he is entitled to a new trial because of the Court's failure to grant him a severance from his father and co-Defendant, Billie Mac Jobe. The Defendant contends that his father would have testified in his behalf in a separate trial and would have given exculpatory testimony. The request for a severance was fully considered by the Court prior to trial. Not only Stanley Jobe, but co-Defendants Sutton, Taylor and Novoa moved for severance and for a separate trial. In support of their pretrial motion for severance, the Defendants submitted an affidavit of Billie Mac Jobe for consideration of the Court in camera. The Court reviewed that affidavit and concluded that it did not meet the legal standard required to entitle Stanley Jobe or any other

[1] The Defendant has filed several affidavits obtained from jurors which purport to reveal the effect of the Allen charge upon their deliberations. These affidavits relate to nothing more than the mental processes of the jurors, and are both incompetent and inadmissible under the provisions of Rule 606(b), Federal Rules of Evidence.

Defendant to a severance. See: United States v. MacDonald, 837 F.2d 1287, 1290 (5th Cir. 1988). The Court now reaffirms that holding, and finds that Stanley Jobe has failed to demonstrate his entitlement to a severance.

In a supplemental motion for new trial, Stanley Jobe contends that he is entitled to a new trial because one of the jurors, a Mr. Shamaley, learned in a conversation with a relative during the course of the trial that Billie Mac Jobe had sustained a prior conviction for bank fraud. The juror did not receive any derogatory information about Defendant Stanley Jobe. Even if this is the kind of "extraneous prejudicial information" which is admissible under Rule 606(b), Federal Rules of Evidence, there is no reasonable possibility that prejudice to Stanley Jobe resulted from it. See: Durr v. Cook, 589 F.2d 891, 894 (5th Cir. 1979). He is not entitled to a new trial on this basis.

Finally, Stanley Jobe moves to dismiss the indictment on the grounds that the grand jury that returned the third superseding indictment in this case heard no evidence, or heard insufficient evidence, or was improperly instructed by the prosecuting attorneys. To clarify the matter, the original indictment in this case was returned by the grand jury in November, 1993. Thereafter, there were not less than three superseding indictments. The same grand jury that returned the original indictment also returned the first superseding indictment. That grand jury was dissolved, and a new grand jury was empaneled. The second grand jury heard evidence regarding this case in March, 1994, and April, 1994. It was this new grand jury that returned the third superseding indictment on April 21, 1994. It is undisputed that the second grand jury heard testimony from a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Lisa Murphy, concerning the charges against the Defendants. It is well established law that a court is not required to look behind a facially valid indictment either to review the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the indictment or to determine whether the prosecutor's presentation of that evidence was incomplete or misleading. United States v. Williams, ___ U.S. ___, 112 S.Ct. 1735, 1746 (1992); Costello v. United States, 350 U.S. 359, 364 (1956). Under the circumstances presented here, Defendant Jobe is not entitled to a new trial or to dismissal of the third superseding indictment. Neither is he entitled to have the Court review in camera the transcribed grand jury proceeding to determine whether the evidence was sufficient.

It is therefore ORDERED that the motion of Defendant Stanley Pruet Jobe for a judgment of acquittal in the above-styled and numbered cause be, and it is hereby, DENIED.

It is further ORDERED that the Defendant's motion for a new trial be, and it is hereby, DENIED.

It is further ORDERED that the Defendant's motion to dismiss the third superseding indictment or for in camera inspection of grand jury transcripts be, and it is hereby, DENIED.

SIGNED AND ENTERED this 29th day of August, 1994.

AFFIDAVIT

My name is JOHN A. SHAMALEY. I served as a juror in the case of U.S. of America vs. Billie Mac Jobe, et al. (No. EP-93-CR-420H). The case was tried in Judge Harry Lee Hudspeth's United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, from June 20 through July 1, 1994.

At some time during the course of the trial, I mentioned to a relative of mine, David Carnes, that I was on the jury in the Jobe case. David Carnes is an employee of one of Jack Cardwell's companies. Mr. Cardwell was on the Board of Directors of Continental National Bank and had some involvement with the facts of this case. I told David Carnes that his boss's name was being mentioned quite a bit during the course of this trial. At that time, David told me that Billie Mac Jobe had previously been convicted in another bank fraud case. He also said that, because of that, he would not be at all surprised to find that something improper was going on here.

At the time that the jury was voir dired and the trial began, I was not aware that Mr. Billie Mac Jobe had had any previous arrests or convictions. There was no evidence presented at the trial that Billie Mac Jobe had had any previous arrests or convictions. I did not relay this information to any of the other jurors on this case, but I was aware after the conversation with David Carnes that

Mr. Jobe had reviously been convicted of the same offense that he vas charged with in this case.
